Dillinger Aid Dies in Fight With Police; Girl Is Jailed

Five Shots Kill Tommy Carroll When He Resists Arrest.

Last Words Were 'Take Care of Jean'

Second Gunman, Who Fled, Believed to Be "No. 1 Enemy."

Waterloo, Iowa, June 7 (AP).—Tommy Carroll, bank robber and accused slayer, was shot to death by peace officers here today—the third of John Dillinger's mobsmen to be killed in the far-flung drive to eradicate the gang and capture its leader.

Carroll, five bullets in his body, fell as he reached for his weapon to resist arrest by two detectives who spotted his car on a tip from a mechanic. He died a few hours later in a hospital.

Captured with him was Jean Crompton, 21, who said she was his wife of a "week or ten days." Both Carroll and the woman were in the sensational abortive Federal police trap in northern Wisconsin when Dillinger and his outlaws shot their way to freedom April 22, leaving two dead.

The death of Carroll brought to 14 those attributed either to the Dillinger gang or resulting from the search for the Indiana hoodlum since the formation of his mushrooming mob last September.

Hope to Take Leader.

At the same time new hopes for the capture of "Wooden Gun John" himself arose. As officers spotted Carroll's car here, reports were current that another couple in a second automobile fled the Waterloo vicinity Eastward and police mobilized for a dragnet in efforts to apprehend the car. Whether it contained Dillinger could not be learned.

Carroll, a newer recruit to Dillinger's mob, had been accused of several Midwestern bank robberies and two slayings. He was wanted for questioning in the killing of Federal Agent W. Carter Baum, slain near the Little Bohemia resort in Wisconsin as Dillinger and his cohorts blasted their way to freedom. Also killed, accidentally, by Federal guns, was a CCC worker.

A second killing laid to Carroll was that of H. C. Perron, San Antonio City detective, slain last December 11.

Girl on Parole.

Police at first were hesitant to identify the Carroll slain here as Dillinger's lieutenant, but he was quick to admit the identity as he was rushed to the hospital, where his first words to officers were "take care of the little girl."

The Crompton girl, arrested after the Little Bohemia incident, only

Two Wounded by Shots In Chicago Barber Shop

Chicago, June 7 (AP).—Nuncio Russo, 39, son of a wealthy importer and manufacturer, was believed fatally wounded late today by an unidentified assailant as he sat in a barber chair getting a haircut. One of the four shots fired by the man also struck a barber, wounding him above the heart. The cause of the shooting was not learned.

Charles Ciccione, 37, proprietor of the barber shop, said a man suddenly appeared in the doorway, fired four shots and fled.

State Legislator Nabbed for Bribery

Lansing, Mich., June 7 (AP).—Representative Tracy W. Southworth, of Monroe, Democratic Administration floor leader in the State Legislature, and Albert J. Tobin, Detroit contractor and lobbyist, were under arrest today, charged with conspiracy to bribe in connection with a permit sought by a Detroit trucking company.

Attorney General Patrick H. O'Brien said that marked money was found on the men after they had conferred with Clarence Pierce, operator of the Border Cities Trucking Co., in a Lansing hotel last night.

Sets Wedding—July '35

LILY PONS.

Buenos Aires, June 7 (AP).—Wedding chimes are to ring again for Lily Pons—but the tempo will be adagio in the soprano's next marriage aria.

The New York Metropolitan opera star announced today that she has set her next wedding date for July 9, 1935, and that her next partner will be Dr. Fritz von der Becke, who is not a singer at all but a physician on the S. S. Cap Arcona.

The bell which is to ring at the ceremony will have to be a ship's

$50,000 Fire Blame Taken By Watchman

Arson Will Be Charged; Accident Claimed in Confession.

After a 17-hour grilling by Capt. Sidney Marks of the Eleventh Precinct, and Fire Marshal R. C. Roberts, Dean Thomas, 29, 300 block of East Capitol street, night watchman at the old Loffler packing plant on Benning road, admitted early last night that he started the fire that virtually destroyed the plant early yesterday, but asserted it was done by accident, according to Capt. Marks. He will be charged with arson, the officer said.

Thomas, taken in custody at the scene of the fire when his statements aroused suspicions of police, was questioned almost continuously by Capt. Marks and Marshal Roberts until finally he admitted, they said, that while he was in the main room of the plant early yesterday he lighted his pipe and threw the match on the floor where, he said, it fell on a burlap bag.

Thomas said there must have been papers in the bag as it blazed up suddenly and he ran toward the shop to get a bucket of water. When about half way to the shop, he said, according to police, he looked back and saw the blaze was beyond his control. He said he

Default on Germany's Loans Seen as Certain

Berlin, June 7 (AP).—Interruption of interest payments by Germany on foreign loans is "definitely certain," it is stated by the weekly report of the German Institute for business research.

Payments will not be made regardless of the decision of American, Dutch and Swiss creditors on the Reichbank's recent transfer offer, the report said. The German press generally echoes the belief the Reichsbank will proclaim a complete moratorium on debts July 1.

Three Killed By Dynamite Quarry Blast

Explosion Buries Workers Under Tons of Rock in Virginia.

Charlottesville, Va., June 7 (Spl.). Three men were killed and a fourth critically injured in a premature explosion of dynamite this morning at the city quarry at the foot of Monticello Mountain.

The dead are Robert Austin Fox, 54, of Greenwood, member of the contracting firm of Fox Bros., Inc., incorporators of the quarry; Thomas J. Smith, 36, of Batesville, laborer; Minor E. Cook, 34, of Greenwood, laborer.

The injured was Clarence Ashby Dowell, 20, of Greenwood, laborer.

Working under the direction of Mr. Fox, the men were engaged in loading a hole with dynamite when it was set off in some unascertained way.

The explosion threw tons of rock upon the four men, Fox and Smith being buried beneath big boulders, and Dowell and Cook partially covered.

The former two were dead when other laborers reached them. Dowell and Cook were rushed in an ambulance to the University Hospital, where Cook died.

Dowell has a fractured skull and is not expected to survive.

The explosion was believed to have set off several other charges which they had placed. There was no way of telling how many of these might have remained unexploded, and workmen moved in the face of a second blast in order to get the bodies.

Other members of the gang of about 20 workmen escaped injury.

Chattanooga, Tenn., June 7 (U.P.). Gen. Rice A. Pierce, commander of the Tennessee Division, was elected commander in chief of the United Confederate Veterans at the final business session of the forty-fourth reunion here today. The new commander's home is at Union City, Tenn.

Cuban Statesman, Politician Fire But Miss on Dueling Field

Havana, June 7 (U.P.).—Unrest among the Cuban masses was epitomized today in a duel between a cabinet minister and a political leader. Three shots were fired, but nobody was hurt.

In the presence of high government officials, Secretary of the Treasury Joaquin Martinez Saenz and Oscar de la Torre sought in vain to settle an affair of honor growing out of political differences.

Martinez Saenz fired twice into the air. De la Torre aimed at his enemy and fired once, but missed. Martinez Saenz told him to shoot again, but he refused. After shaking hands coldly, the two men stalked off the field, unreconciled.

The drama occurred under circumstances of traditional formality. The two statesmen went separately to the farm of Jose Plasencia, near Cantarana, with their seconds and a few close friends.

The challenge had been issued at a dinner last Sunday night. Martinez Saenz was reported to have called Torre a traitor to the main wing of the ABC radical party and only a duel could settle the insult.

Martinez Saenz solemnly resigned from the cabinet last night, a formality to permit him to fight the duel. He was expected to be reinstated.

The two statesmen practiced a few shots with dueling pistols. They bowed, paced off 25 steps, turned and awaited the signal to fire. Each was allowed two shots.

The umpire gave the signal. Martinez Saenz quickly raised his weapon and fired two shots into the air.

The minister then stood calmly awaiting De la Torre to fire. The latter took aim and fired, but missed. O little knot of 25 persons, including some other cabinet members, nervously hurried away.

Nazis Join State Guard, Quiz Shows

'Steel Helmets' Credited With Using U. S. Rifles in Drill.

Propaganda Declared Roosevelt Stock of Jewish Origin.

By Frank Getty.

Testimony that members of the "Steel Helmets," an organization of German World War veterans, are joining the New York National Guard——and even carrying away rifles furnished the Guard by the United States to use in their own drills—was given yesterday before the special House committee investigating Nazi activity and propaganda in this country.

Acting under orders of the Minister of Labor in the Hitler cabinet, the American branch of the "Steel Helmets" also has smuggled arms and uniforms into the United States, Frank Mutschinski, leader of the New York local, testified.

Activities Described.

The activity of the "Steel Helmets"—German equivalent of the American Legion—in a score of American cities was described near the close of a day's hearing which developed the following facts:

Propaganda to the effect that President Roosevelt's forbears were "Dutch Jews by the original name of Rosenfeld" has been circulated widely by the Liberation News Bureau, with headquarters here.

The propaganda was released by the "Silver Shirts," the anti-Semitic organization which yesterday was linked by direct testimony with pro-Hitler agents in the United States.

The adjutant of the "Silver Shirts," upon learning he was to be called to testify, destroyed letters and papers the committee wished to examine.

A statement by George Sylvester Viereck to the effect that Ivy Lee is a paid propagandist for the Soviet government led the committee to decide to subpoena him. Allegations that "an Oriental power," in cahoot with Russia, was planning to invade the various canning plants of the United States, place poison in canned goods, and decimate the population to make conquest of this country easy, were circulated by one of the witnesses.

Stubborn Witness.

This witness was Paul A. von Lilienfeld Toal, a stubborn, unsmiling young man who claimed descent from Esthonian nobility and the right to speak his mind to the point where it became necessary for Chairman McCormack to interrupt proceedings and warn him of the consequences.

Laid off by the North German Lloyd Line last December, Toal found employment with William Dudley Pelley, whose "Silver Shirts" were getting a foothold in many cities, but were badly in need of subscriptions.

One of his duties was to circulate a "confidential" memorandum, to the effect that "reputable inves-

Visitors See Zoo Lions Kill Guard Reaching for Hat

Whipsnade, England, June 7 (AP).—While horrified spetcators looked on, four lions in an open-air zoo today killed a zoo employe who had gone into their pit to recover a visitor's hat.

The owner of the hat and several other persons who tried to save the victim, Stanley Lewis Stenson, were driven back by the lions, two of which eventually were killed by keepers.

Stenson, employed in the catering department of the zoo, went into the inclosure between the outer barrier and the railing surrounding the pit in which the lions are kept. Two lions reached through the bars and began mauling him.

Stenson then fell into the pit, striking his head on the concrete 16 feet below. The loans dragged him further in and killed him as the spectators screamed and several women fainted.

Arms Shipment Ban Expected in 2 Weeks

London, June 7 (AP).—Official circles said today they expect the embargo on shipments of war materials to Paraguay and Bolivia to be made effective at Geneva within two weeks.

It was understood the delay in promulgating the embargo there has been due to the desire of a number of Nations who have signified their willingness to enter the embargo, to get Russia, Japan and Germany to adhere to its terms.

Paris Police Justified In Firing on Rioters

Paris, June 7 (AP).—After three months of hearings, a parliamentary commission decided today that the Parisian police were justified in firing on rioters in the Place de la Concorde February 6.

The commission was unable to find anyone who would admit giving the orders for the firing in which six rioters were killed, and decided that the police fired of their own accord.

NRA Drops Price Fixing From Codes

Business Critics Win Virtual Abolition of Provisions.

Emergency Regulation Kept; Anti-Trust Laws Revived.

A storm of criticism from business generally culminated yesterday in virual abandonment by NRA of attempts to fix prices.

Several score codes will be revised under the new policy, designed to permit freer competition. The program involved definite revival of antitrust laws against secret price-maintaining combinations. Even minimum prices will be taboo in the future except in definite emergencies.

The declaration followed months of study by economists and was regarded as likely to prevent monopolistic practices such as recently drew the fire of the Darrow review board.

Outstanding provisions of the new price policy:

1. Willfully destructive price-cutting is forbidden and any prices which appear unreasonably low may be investigated and a correction required if they are found to be unfair.

Limited to Emergencies.

2. Fixing of even a minimum price will be allowed only in cases of demonstrable emergency, threatening destruction of business firms, employment or wage levels. Then only NRA shall have the right to determine what is the minimum price to be fixed and it shall be "the lowest reasonable cost" — not a profit-covering figure for a majority of enterprises.
3. Open price posting—the practice of letting all competitors know every other competitor's price—will be allowed only on these terms: That the prices be reported to a neutral confidential agency; they shall become effective immediately without a waiting period for powerful competitors to argue the original filer into line with their own figures; prices may not be revised upward for 48 hours, but they may be cut without delay and so reported.

A clause interpreted as reviving the anti-trust laws for violators, read:

Forbids Agreements.

"No member of the industry shall enter into any agreement, understanding, combination or conspiracy to fix or maintain price terms, nor cause or attempt to cause any member of the industry to change his price terms by the use of intimidation, coercion, or any other influence inconsistent with the maintenance of the free and open market which it is the purpose of this article to create."

Nearly half of the existing 400-odd NRA codes contain provisions for open price reporting. A large number of other pacts prohibit "selling below cost."

The recovery unit declared itself in favor of "properly drawn open price provisions" so as to level out competitive extremes "without unduly curtailing private initiative or destroying incentives to any individual legitimately to extend his business."

Observers believed the net result of the new policy would be to outlaw attempts to keep prices up through code requirements. The

Baltimore Bunny Trails Policeman And Feasts in Jail

Baltimore, June 7 (Spl.).—Walking his beat in West Lexington street today, Patrolman Joseph Lewinsky sensed that something was following him. He turned, his hand reaching for his pistol.

And beheld a rabbit.

Lewinsky attempted to persuade the animal to go home, but it was no use. Everywhere that Lewinsky went Bunny was sure to go.

Finally the policeman ended his tour of duty at the Western Police Station, and bunny followed him into the building. Turnkeys hustled about finding carrots, lettuce, and water for the animal, fearless of the bluecoats. The police believe the animal is a lost pet.

Sharon, Pa., Child Lost, Police Scent Abduction

Sharon, Pa., June 7 (AP).—Chief of Police Charles Steger said today he was satisfied that 4-year-old Leah Minerva Dilley, missing from her home since Sunday, "had been stolen."

The search was intensified today and Boy Scouts and volunteers joined police in an effort to find some trace of the child who last was seen playing in a park resort.

Los Angeles Jurors Indict Ax Murderer

Los Angeles, June 7 (AP).—Indictments charging 21-year-old Louis Payne with the ax murders of his mother and young brother were voted by the grand jury today.

The youth was refused permission to attend the funeral services at Glendale. Lucius C. Payne, former St. Louis utilities executive, announced he had retained former Judge Leonard Wilson to defend his son.

Roosevelt Intervention To Prevent Steel Strike Considered Imminent

Calvert Span Moved As Throng Watches

Holiday Atmosphere Prevails as 43-Year-Old Bridge Journeys 80 Feet to New Site; Ready for Traffic Tomorrow.

In a holiday atmosphere, which had the combined characteristics of a carnival, a first night and a 4:30 p. m. rush, old Calvert Street Bridge was given a new home 80 feet farther south yesterday after having done business 43 years in the old location.

It was a few minutes before 8 a. m. when the actual moving began. At 3:30 p. m., the gangling 1,200 ton span was within 5 inches of her designated mark. It took another hour to negotiate those last five important inches.

So today you'll find the old steel bridge, which still has a long period of service left before replacement by an up to date successor of masonry, considerably down-stream as workmen are giving the footings a concrete grouting and putting in other finishing touches so that traffic across it may resume by tomorrow morning.

A thousand steel rollers, each 3 inches in diameter and about 18 inches long, were used to ride the bridge. Five horses, hitched to windlasses, were the sole motive power, except for the first yard which was negotiated by ten burly laborers at the handles of screw-jacks placed at the base of each of the five towers.

Thousands of persons witnessed the unique operation, ranging from a handful when the last street car passed over at 2:12 a. m. to dense throngs during the afternoon hours. Scores of policemen, from precinct privates to Superintendent Ernest W. Brown, were scattered on either side and in the valley below to keep spectators within safe bounds.

Throughout the day Taft Bridge, heavily overtaxed by the temporary closing of its neighbor, was jammed with cars. Back and forth shuttled Capital Transit Co. busses, transferring street car passengers bound south and north. Hawkers, taking

Scores Hurt In British Red, Fascist Riot

Knives and Razors Flash; Sir Oswald Mosley Badly Jostled.

London, June 7 (U.P.).—Knives and razors flashed in the streets of London tonight during sharp fighting between hundreds of Communists and British Fascists at a black shirts meeting in Olympia Hall.

Scores on both sides were badly injured. Ambulances rushed to the scene, giving first-aid to the wounded and carrying several to hospitals. Foot and mounted police wielding night sticks restored order.

Sir Oswald Mosley, dapper leader of the British Fascist movement, was badly jostled as he made his way through the streets to the big auditorium where he addressed 15,000 followers.

Bands of Communists sought to block the avenues and prevent the gathering, but were beaten back by police and Black Shirts.

Men and women in evening dress sought to leave quietly when the fighting began. Sir Oswald was frequently forced to stop speaking while Communists were roughly ejected.

He spoke for two hours, and was loudly cheered when he shouted:

"If the Fascists are elected to power, we will not leave Britain the only unarmed nation in an armed world."

Sir Oswald confirmed that the Black Shirts were definitely anti-Jewish, like the Nazis in Germany. He attacked the government, saying:

"Today we demand a new creed, a new spiritual movement uniting patriotism and progress which upholds King and country, but is determined to make the country worthy of both."

Several disturbances occurred later, when the meeting ended. Foot and mounted police arrested 11 men and 1 woman for disorderly conduct.

State of Siege Decreed.

Bogota, Colombia, June 7 (AP). The government today decreed a state of siege in Antioquia Department, where transportation facilities are tied up by a protracted strike of railroad workers.

Three Shoot 71s, Tie for Lead in Open

Cruickshank, Cox, Lacey Lead by Two Strokes; Sarazen Has 73.

(Post Staff Correspondent).

Merion Cricket Club, Ardmore, Pa., June 7 (Spl.).—Merion, with her deceiving "white faces" and "green aprons," defied 149 of the world's greatest golfers today in the first round of the National Open golf championship, and tonight three out of the pack—Bobby Cruickshank, of Richmond, Va.; Wiffy Cox, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and Charlie Lacey, a "dark horse," of Great Neck, N. Y.—dominated the field.

Cruickshank, Cox and Lacey clicked off rounds of 71 each, for this magnificent par 70 layout, and led Gene Sarzen, former British and American Open champion and present wearer of the National P. G. A. title by two strokes.

Cruickshank Steady.

That "wee Scot" Cruickshank, the man Bobby Jones defeated in a stirring play-off for the National Open title of 1923, turned in the steadiest golf of the opening day, with his 36—35, that was set off by a sparkling birdie 3 on the first hole. Cox, 38-year-old Dyker Beach pro, who last winter won the famous Auga Caliente tournament and has always been a dangerous challenger for major titles, shot the last nine holes in even par 34, after a 3-putt green on the ninth cost him a 37.

The 27-year-old Lacey had a wonderful chance to take over the lead, but muffed a 2-footer on the home green, taking a five. Lacey, prominent in metropolitan golf circles, went out in 37 and roared over the stretch in 34. His 3-putt on the last hole robbed him of what would have been the lowest nine-hole round of the day.

In the heat of today's scuffle, champions and near champions of former years bowed before the invincible "Ole Man Par."

2 Army Nurses Due $175,000 From Gen. Ainsworth's Estate

Two Army nurses will receive a total of more than $175,000 from the estate of Maj. Gen. Fred C. Ainsworth, U. S. A., retired, it was disclosed yesterday when his will was filed in the District Supreme Court.

To one, Elizabeth Kerwin, of Walter Reed Hospital, Gen. Ainsworth, who died June 5, left $150,000 in cash and the balance of whatever is left in the estate when specific bequests of $415,000 are paid. The other, Ann Coghlan, described as formerly being at Walter Reed Hospital, is given $25,000.

The will described Miss Kerwin as the "faithful companion and nurse for the past nine years, who has made many sacrifices in order to remain at my side."

Heirs "or next of kin" of the general's deceased wife were precluded from any share of the estate with the observation that they had never taken any interest in the general and had had unpleasant relations with him.

Large bequests were made to charitable institutions. Archbishop Michael J. Curley of Baltimore is given $100,000 for the use and training of homeless children, and the Shriners' Hospital for Crippled Children is to have $75,000. The Masonic Home for the Aged is to receive $25,000, while all books and papers will be given to the Library of Congress, and firearms to the National Rifle Association.

Private bequests shown in the will include payments of $10,000 to Mary W. Davis, an employee; $5,000 to Merritt W. Ireland, former surgeon general of the Army; $10,000 to Maj. Jones, Army Medical Corps, and $5,000 to Maj. Frank Chamberlain, Army Medical Corps. Establishment of a $10,000 fund for the installation of a "Fred C. Ainsworth Endowment Library at Walter Reed Hospital" was provided for in the last item in the will.

No estimate of the value of Gen. Ainsworth's estate was given. The will was filed by the American Security & Trust Co.

McGrady Asks Bosses for Conference With Union Chiefs.

Pinchot Flies Here To See Secretary

Wagner Bill's Passage Urged as Necessary to Halt Walkout.

Rumblings of a paralyzing steel strike stirred official Washington yesterday as intervention by President Roosevelt appeared imminent.

Outstanding developments were:

Edward F. McGrady, assistant Secretary of Labor, announced he would dispatch a letter to the American Iron and Steel Institute, asking it to send representatives here for a joint conference with union leaders.

Eugene Grace, head of Bethlehem Steel Corporation, announced in New York the institute had written a letter to Recovery Administrator Hugh S. Johnson. He declined to confirm reports that the message dealt with creation of a steel mediation board.

Union spokesmen camped on the White House doorstep an hour and were received by Secretary Marvin H. McIntyre after Mr. Roosevelt left the executive offices. The labor chiefs said they would return today and renew attempts to see the President.

President Roosevelt, it was learned, is anxious to have his hand strengthened by passage of the Wagner labor disputes bill before Congress adjourns. Debate on the measure may delay end of the session.

Pinchot Flies Here.

Gov. Gifford Pinchot of Pennsylvania, flew here and discussed with Secretary Perkins means of averting bloodshed should the walkout begin June 16, as threatened. He reiterated steel mills were "arming" in preparation for trouble.

Recovery Administrator Johnson considered canceling a Chicago speech tonight, so he could work out for a steel compromise.

The move for a peace parley between manufacturers and labor was initiated by McGrady at the conclusion of a stormy two-hour meeting with ten leaders of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers, headed by William J. Spang, of Duquesne, Pa.

Merrill Moore, a tall, wiry union local president form Steubenville, Ohio, with a shock of black hair, fairly bristled with anger as he emerged from the conference with McGrady.

Delegate Shows Anger.

"We're done with this stalling," Moore warned. "If we don't get to see the President soon we will return home and start the ball rolling for a real strike."

Mr. Roosevelt departed from his

Lithuania Kills Coup Attempt

Waldemaras Is Arrested After Leaving Exile for Kaunas.

Kaunas, Lithuania, June 7 (AP).—Augustine Waldemaras, former dictator of Lithuania, who was reported in foreign capitals today to have seized the government, has been arrested. The country is quiet with the government in complete control of the situation.

The arrest of former Dictator Augustine Waldemaras ended his third attempt to overthrow the Lithuanian Fascist dictatorship, headed by President Antanas Smetona, who was his former colleague in governing the country.

Reports received in London stated that Waldemaras went to the Lithuanian capital by airplane this morning from the country town where he has been in exile since he was forced out of power by a coup d'etat in 1929.

A small portion of the army was said to have given its support to the attempted seizure of the government, but the majority of the troops remained loyal to the President and enabled the government to maintain control of the situation throughout.

The Lithuanian government apparently took strict precautions to prevent news of the occurrence getting out. The first statement on the subject in London merely said: "Early this morning a trial alarm was sounded amongst the garrison at Kaunas. There was some misunderstanding and some little excitement, during which a number of shots were fired. No one was killed and no one was wounded."

French Fight U. S. Film Ban.

Paris, June 7 (AP).—Three hundred motion picture theater owners from all parts of France met here today to protest against proposed drastic restrictions on importation of American films.

Fletcher Sets Fall Elections As First Goal

Bids for Younger G. O. P. Support and Warns of New Conditions.

By Raymond Clapper.

Chicago, June 7.—A fight across the whole political front to elect the maximum number of Republican Senators and Representatives and to restore the deliberative functions of Congress was set as the first goal of the Republican party by the new National chairman, Henry P. Fletcher, of Pennsylvania, when he assumed his new post here today.

He made a distinct effort during his first day of activity to identify the party as sound but progressive, determined to meet new conditions with a broad social outlook.

A bid was made for the young Republicans when the executive committee authorized Chairman Fletcher to appoint a sub-committee to encourage organization of youthful voters.

Special effort to win back the Middle West was indicated by the decision to open a Chicago headquarters as a center of Republican farm belt activities.

Recognizes New Conditions.

It was made plain during conferences between Chairman Fletcher and the National executive committee and the joint Congressional committee, that he recognizes new conditions have arisen which require the Republican party to adopt a more progressive tone—one reminiscent of Theodore Roosevelt under whom the new chairman fought as a Rough Rider in the Spanish-American War. Though coming from Pennsylvania, he emphasized to the executive committee that he was thinking in terms west of the Alleghenies and the Mississippi River.

In his first general utterance, Chairman Fletcher subscribed to the statement of principles adopted by the National committee yesterday.

"I believe it accurately represents the sound but progressive policy of the Republican party," he said. "One should not be considered a hide-bound conservative because he believes in the multiplication table, nor a Tory because he has faith in American institutions and in the capacity of the American people to govern themselves.

Principles at Issue.

Our party, however, recognizes and will recognize when we are returned to power that great changes in our social and economic organization have taken place since we became a Nation; that new conditions require a broad social outlook; that the diversity and complexity of the interests of our people, living as we do under a Federal system of independent States, necessitates a high degree of centralized regulation and supervision so that the interests of all our people may be safeguarded."

Declaring the issue to be one of principles rather than personalities, Chairman Fletcher said he conceived it to be the party's duty to focus public attention "on the unsound measures which have been rushed through in Washington."

He said it was pertinent to raise the question among the voters "whether they wish the men they send to Washington to be free-born, self-respecting legislators—representing the intelligence and integrity of their constituents—or whether they want them blindly to pass measures which strike at the fundamentals of our Government, and which are prepared for them by a group of inexperienced theorists who have lost their American faith."

Time for Common Sense.

He referred to "hazardous and dangerous experiments," to steadily mounting public debt "which must be paid by oppressive taxation or repudiated inflation," warned that "tinkering with our monetary system must stop," declared the country must have social justice but under free institutions, and said it is time to stop and listen—"not to the siren voice of the political magicians but to the dictates of hard common sense."

It was all a rather unique emanation from Pennsylvania—the home of Cameron, Quay and Penrose—from this silver-haired veteran of the diplomatic service who until yesterday was referred to as "the ambassador," walking into the Palmer House meeting of politicians jauntily swinging a cane and wearing his straw sailor hat tilted slightly to one side.

This is his first experience as a campaign organizer and there was a great to-do as veteran hard-joweled wheelhorses of the party gathered around to hold his hand. He was overwhelmed with what is known in the trade as "practical advice," but he reserved judgment and showed every indication of moving cautiously and finding out the lay of the land before acting.

His first effort is to smooth over the bad feeling which has existed between the National committee and the joint Congressional committee.

Elections Come First.

"Our first job," he said, "is to elect Republican Senators and Representatives and not to think of Presidential matters. You can make that as emphatic as you want to."

He spent part of the afternoon in conference with Senator Daniel O. Hastings and Representative Chester Bolton, cochairmen of the Congressional campaign committee. They predicted that there would be close cooperation. Money-raising activities will be merged. A combined office, representing both committees, will be set up in Chicago as a Midwestern branch. Speaking and publicity work will be coordinated with an eye on the Congressional contest.

Close coordination is unusually important this year, since many Republicans up for reelection voted for a large number of Roosevelt emergency measures. Specific assault on some of these measures from the National committee would be embarrassing, and in instances well nigh fatal to some Republican Senatorial and Congressional candidates. Fletcher's job is to temper the attack to protect these candidates and yet carry on a general barrage which will strike over their heads at the enemy's main trenches. It takes accurate aim.

Furthermore, he is up against a skillful crew of experienced opponents, led by the energetic gum-chewing Farley, who learned the game down in the precincts, and who is aided by the vast advantage which goes to the party in power, with its thousands of jobs and its resources in Federal appropriations.

Some Mumbling in West.

There was still some mumbling among Western members of the National committee today over the selection of a Pennsylvanian, but heroic efforts were being made to appease them.

Young John Hamilton, Kansas National committeeman, just made general counsel of the committee, sat as an ex-officio member of the National committee and urged Chairman Fletcher to go out into the Middle West on a speaking tour soon.

"I want to meet the workers," Fletcher said in reply.

"Come out and you'll meet them all," Hamilton told him.

A number on the committee are urging that Hamilton be put to work out on the firing line in the Midwest as an assistant chairman of the committee. He has, among the younger Republicans, made the deepest impression on the party organization here this week.

The executive committee received a telegram from former President Hoover congratulating the committee on its new chairman, urging that due representation be given to the young Republicans, indorsing the party declaration of principles and emphasizing the importance of constructive criticism through vigorous party organization.

Within a few minutes after Chairman Fletcher met with the executive committee he was made aware of the factional differences which had preceded his election.

"We weren't all for you," said Mrs. A. T. Hert, of Kentucky, vice chairman of the committee. "Some wanted a red-haired man (meaning Hamilton, of Kansas) and some wanted a black-haired man (meaning Hallanan, of West Virginia), but we got a time-honored silver-haired man and we are all 100 per cent for you now."

Capper Congratulates Him.

Senator Arthur Capper, of Kansas, who had backed Hamilton for the chairmanship, sent Fletcher a telegram from Washington congratulating him on having taken "a tough but worth-while job," and offering to help.

There was slight dismay at the acid comment of Senator McNary, Republican Senate leader, who was quoted in Chicago newspapers as lamenting that a Western man was not chosen, and that Fletcher was a good man but not a brilliant one.

Discussions took place regarding centralization of money raising. George Getz, National treasurer, was given an assistant, Charles Goodspeed, who has been Illinois money raiser for the party.

When he was first introduced to the executive committee, Fletcher in a brief greeting declared that under the principles of the party as adopted yesterday, "we can win this year's elections and every other one to follow."

"We have important issues in every State of the Union," he continued. "We must bring to the people the story of what is happening in Washington and what will happen if the brakes are not put on. I am ready to go to work. While I come from the East, my interests are not bound by the Alleghenies nor the Mississippi."

Chairman Fletcher left for Pennsylvania tonight, where the Republican State committee is to be reorganized following another defeat for the Vare organization in Philadelphia. Early next week he expects to go to Washington to get the party's new regime under way at National headquarters.

U. S. Urges Partnership To End Longshore Strik

San Francisco, June 7 (AP).—A "triple partnership" was proposed by the Government today to end the longshoremen's strike, as the first vessel sailed from Portland, marking an opening in the long shipping blockade.

Dr. Henry Grady, member of President Roosevelt's mediation board, received word that Secretary Perkins had completed a proposal for supervision of the disputed hiring halls, making it a three-way arrangement among employe, employer and the Government.

Drought Makes Bridges Useless in Midwest

Burning temperatures of the drought have drained many swiftly flowing streams like the one above, the Raccoon River, Des Moines, Iowa, which was reduced to a record low. Countless streams in the Midwest, ordinarily 10 to 20 feet deep, may now be walked across.

tigators seeking to establish correctly the Roosevelt family genealogy are forced to the conclusion that the President's forebears were Dutch Jews by the original name of Rosenfeld, inasmuch as they can find no trace of the Roosevelts in the vital statistics of the Netherlands."

"Did you believe that?" Toal was asked, as the caucus room rang with the only laughter of an otherwise dull day.

"I didn't know if it was true or not," the witness replied, without a change of expression.

President's Family.

The memorandum went on to say that this somewhat unusual version of the President's racial extraction "is mentioned to possibly explain the present Mr. Roosevelt's extraordinarily leaning toward Hebrews in all truly significant offices and functions."

Toal also blandly admitted burning his papers between the time when he learned he was to come here to testify and receipt of the actual subpena. He admitted authorship of a proposal to bar Catholics from the "Silver Shirts" unless they renounced spiritual allegiance to the head of the church and swore such allegiance to "our great leader"—Pelley, who has fled to Mexico following his indictment in North Carolina.

Pelley, it developed from his henchman's testimony, expected to become President of the United States.

"Why not?" exclaimed Toal, indignantly, when committee members smiled and the audience tittered.

Viereck Accuses Lee.

Viereck's accusation against Ivy Lee, former Rockefeller press agent in New York, will be aired by the committee shortly, Chairman McCormack said.

Viereck, revealed as recipient of a $1,750 monthly commission for having negotiated a lucrative contract with German interests for a New York publicity firm, issued a statement yesterday to give his version of the transaction.

"If it is right for Congressman Dickstein's Russian compatriots to hire Mr. Ivy Lee, why is it wrong for the German railroads to employ my firm?" Viereck asked.

Chairman McCormack promised to send Viereck a subpena.

The testimony of George S. Anderson, former business manager for Pelley, served to establish definitely the link between the "Silver Shirts" nad German propagandists in this country. Frequent visits of Pelley to Washington, where he hoped to become installed after he had established "a form of Hitlerism" here, were described. On the occasion of those visits, the "Silver Shirt" leader sought contact with agents of the Nazi leader. He also sought financial backing from Germans to whom the aims of the organization made a special appeal.

After it was all over, the committee decided to ask the State Department to look into allegations that German consuls in Chicago and St. Louis had helped spread Nazi propaganda, and to ask the House for $40,000 more to continue its probe.

Packers Warn Strikers To Return or Lose Jobs

Oklahoma City, June 7 (AP).—Armour & Co. officials served notice today on striking packing-house workers here that they would be dropped permanently from the pay roll unless they report for work tomorrow.

program represented the first agreement of either the Government or a business agency on what constituted desirable price competition.

Meets Charges by Business.

The effect of the new policy will be to meet charges of trade associations that NRA fixed prices were so difficult of enforcement that merchants and manufacturers who abided by code provisions were confronted with a loss of business due to failure of their unscrupulous competitors to conform.

Senatorial critics charged large firms gained an advantage over the "little fellow" by using their influence to obtain price provisions objectionable to the small business man.

With Johnson and other officials conceding NRA is in a transition stage, the price announcement was looked upon as but one of a series of moves by the recovery unit toward greater home rule by industry with less interference from the Government.

It was recalled, however, that in several instances large industries have solicited fixing of prices by NRA to prevent price wars. Only a few weeks ago an emergency was declared to exist in the tire industry so the NRA could set minimum prices. Such action was requested by both dealers and manufacturers.

Busy Docket Forces Hopewell Case Delay

The Labor Board offices said yesterday the Hopewell (Va.) case was not reached by the board at its executive session. The case was one of a score on the board's docket. In the Hopewell case, the Tubize-Chatillon Corporation Wednesday rejected the board's proposal for settlement of labor troubles at the Virginia rayon plant.

Belated Rains Ease Drought In Some Areas

Roosevelt Prepares to Ask $225,000,000 Fund to Help Victims.

By Leon Dure, Jr.

Belated rains watered the heart of the drought area yesterday, reviving some hope in the sun-parched West, as President Roosevelt canvassed the situation with relief officials preliminary to asking Congress for $525,000,000 with which to combat the Nation's worst blight.

Although the weather report was the most cheering in weeks, disclosing heavy, general rainfall in both Dakotas and part of Montana, Minnesota, Iowa and Nebraska, the Department of Agriculture did not consider them as any assurance the long dry spell is finally relenting.

More rain is expected today in North Dakota, Minnesota and Wisconsin, with the possibility of scattered showers in western Michigan and parts of Indiana, Illinois, Iowa and South Dakota, but the rest of the interior apparently is in for another day under a hot, cloudless sky.

Grain Is Benefited.

J. B. Kincer, in charge of the climate and crop weather division of the Weather Bureau, reported that yesterday's rainfall is sufficient to benefit corn and spring wheat substantially in some sections and to enable the germination of forage crops which can now be planted.

With the knowledge, however, that most of the drought's damage now can not be repaired, the Agricultural Adjustment Administration added 25 more counties in Minnesota, New Mexico and South Dakota to its lengthening list of "emergency" areas in which its cattle-buying program will be carried out.

Chief damage in the drought-stricken States has been to wheat and forage crops, which in many cases have been destroyed by lack of water, and to live stock. Although estimates have been declared difficult, some experts foresaw a decrease in the wheat crop sufficient to erase the huge carryover.

Preparatory to his message on drought relief, now expected to be sent to Congress on Saturday, the President conferred with Lewis W. Douglas, Director of the Budget, and Harry L. Hopkins, relief administrator, who pointed out that 10,000,000 dwell in the 15 States suffering most severely.

"This area," Hopkins declared, "no doubt is going to spread, even though there is rain. This involves one of the most serious disasters that has ever occurred in this country." He added that, while there is no danger of a food shortage, the relief problem is tremendous.

"We have got to develop a program so that there will be a cash income to meet the minimum needs; take out enough stock so that the balance can be adequately fed, and other appropriate work projects developed to assure protection for water, both for human beings and for cattle."

Wants Many Families to Move.

Declaring that the Administration is determined to meet the situation "promtply and adequately," Hopkins asserted the program is based on the belief that the 125,000 farm families in the emergency area should be kept on the land. But, he said, "thousands of these should be moved within State boundaries to farms where they can maintain a decent economy."

Hopkins returned to his office and announced additional allotments of $235,000 to Iowa and $100,000 to New Mexico for drought relief. Almost daily the relief administration has been doling out sums, generally totaling into the millions, for work relief projects in the arid country.

A similar concern for the drought is being evidenced on Capitol Hill, where the Senate yesterday approved and sent to the White House a $1,000,000 appropriation to fight chinch bugs in the Middle West. The resolution was offered by Senator Carter Glass (Democrat), Virginia, and adopted without debate.

Tax Exemption Raised.

Not to be outdone, the House approved a further tax exemption on processed hogs, raising the tax-free amount allowed each breeder to 2,000 pounds, instead of 300 as at present. This was to permit farmers with only a small number of hogs to market them more profitably.

As an instance of how far-reaching are the effects of the drought, the Department of Agriculture foresees a reduction in chicken, eggs and dairy production because of the scarcity of grains. Meat production will increase for the next six months, due to forced slaughtering of live stock, but then will fall off. Thus the drought will affect city consumers throughout the Nation.

3 Killed, 14 Hurt In Blast on Tanker

Gas Torch Ignites Fumes in Drydocked Vessel.

Philadelphia, June 7 (AP).—Three workmen were killed and 14 injured, one seriously, in an explosion late today in the oil tanker W. D. Anderson, in drydock for repairs.

Police said the explosion apparently was caused by an acetylene torch igniting fumes in the hold of the vessel. Five steel plates were torn from its prow by the blast.

The three men killed were working on a scaffold. Those working in the interior of the vessel were trapped by the blast and the fire which followed. They were rescued by sailors and firemen and taken to a hospital.

The dead were Morris L. Koller, 23; William T. Klinger, 22; Harold J. Spatz, 18, and H. H. Schaeffer, 22, all of Reading.

Intervention Likely to Halt Steel Walkout

Employers Asked to Come Here for Conference With Unionists.

office for the day shortly after the labor delegation arrived at the White House. After an hour's wait, most of the time spent hovering about the entrance to the Executive offices and posing for photographers, the unionists were ushered into the President's private office for a brief conference with McIntyre behind closed doors.

"About all we got was a chance to try out the President's cigarettes," one of the visitors remarked as the parley ended.

Spang announced the delegation would seek an audience with Mr. Roosevelt again today. He added Mike F. Tighe, Amalgamated president, would arrive from Cleveland today to participate in the negotiations. Spang denied repeated rumors of a split between his delegation and Tighe.

Threatens to Finish Fight.

While at the White House the Spang group issued a joint statement, threatening if steel magnates refused to participate in a collective bargaining conference, 100,000 workers would "fight as the miners fought and this will be a strike to enforce the law and to prove that the Government at last is bigger than the Steel Trust."

"In 1902," they said, "J. P. Morgan, who made the steel trust, was determined to deny collective bargaining to 150,000 anthracite coal miners. President Theodore Roosevelt compelled Morgan to come to the White House and settle with the union miners. That was at the end of a long, fierce strike.

"Today the right of collective bargaining has been written into the National recovery law. We are going to ask President Roosevelt if 300,000 steel workers have got to strike to enforce that law.

"The time is very short. We have to go back and tell our lodges that it is a fight or that it is a collective bargaining conference."

Weirton Policy Scored.

Before calling at the White House, Spang and his associates sent President Roosevelt a telegram, charging the Weirton Steel Co., outstanding foe of the union, had discharged 116 men while the unionists were here seeking recognition.

"For several days," the message complained, "Weirton Steel Co. bosses have been asking each man if he would strike or stay in the mill. Discharged men said they would strike."

This development, the Spang group said, was "only one of many provocative tactics by the steel corporations, which have continually refused to bargain collectively with their employes."

Mr. Roosevelt was informed discharge was the penalty for any worker who joined the union, or who committed the "crime of coming to see you to obtain enforcement" of NIRA labor provisions.

Johnson made known he would address a convention of the International Ladies Garment Workers by telephone, if the steel crisis prevented him from flying to Chicago today, as originally contemplated.

Workers Protest Strike.

Meanwhile, a delegation of steel workers from McKeesport, Pa., who denied they represented a company union, called on Johnson and protested against a strike. Their leader, Watson McKee, secretary of the McKeesport Chamber of Commerce, said Pennsylvania steel workers as a whole were satisfied with conditions.

McKee denied steel mill operators were preparing for battle, as charged by Pinchot.

"I'll eat all the machine guns and barbed wire Gov. Pinchot can find," he shouted.

In response, Pinchot commented: "I'm so used to having my statements challenged, it no longer makes any difference to me."

Dunn appeared before the commissioner on a warrant charging him with robbery. The complainant was Charles R. Streeks, an employe of the Heurich company.

Dewey Jenkins, arrested with Dunn in Richmond, Va., was released on a $1,000 bond Wednesday. He is charged with being an accessory. Three others, said by police to have been associated with Dunn in the "Tristate" gang, are being held by police in Baltimore, while three others are still at large.

Fire Damages Packing House; Watchman Held then telephoned the fire department.

Tried to Shift Suspicion.

Thomas is said to have told police he was so frightened that he went to a door in the rear of the building and forced the lock on it to throw suspicion from himself and make it appear that another had entered the building and started the fire in his absence.

It was the marks on this door, in addition to Thomas' conflicting statements regarding the time of the fire and the length of time elapsing before he gave the alarm, that caused Capt. Marks to arrest him at the scene of the fire.

Police reported Thomas appeared anxious to see that his car was locked as he talked with them and that they searched the car and found in it a crowbar and screwdriver which apparently had made the marks on the door. Thomas at first denied he knew anything about the marks on the door, but finally admitted he had forced it open. For several hours would not tell why.

Started Shortly Before 2 A. M.

The fire broke out shortly before 2 a. m., and gained such headway that four alarms were turned in. Until 7 a. m. firemen fought the stubborn flames, which all but destroyed the structure formerly housing the Loffler plant. About a year ago the packers moved to another section, the building being bought by Adolf Gobel, Inc., of New York.

According to J. W. Belt, chief engineer of the building, the fire started in the storeroom. Belt stated Thomas told him he had seen a man running away from the structure. Later, Belt said, Thomas changed his story and said he thought the blaze had been kindled by sparks from a locomotive.

Fire Company 13, Truck 7, Truck 14 and Engine Companies 27, 19, 10, 8, 18, 15 and 12 responded to the alarms.

Seven firemen were overcome by smoke when they entered the third floor. They were rescued and responded rapidly to treatment. Two other firefighters were out when glass office doors burst in the heat. They were given first aid at Emergency Hospital and released.

At 7 a. m. hose still played on the smoldering structure. Traffic was tied up as hundreds watched. Relief firemen came on duty at 8 a. m. and 50 exhausted men retired.

Belt said the damage would be about $50,000, but Fire Marshall Lauber, in charge of the companies on the scene, made no estimate.

Workhouse Prisoners Flee.

Two prisoners early yesterday escaped from the district workhouse at Occoquan, Va. They are William McCourt, 34, and Joseph F. Reiley, 41. Both were serving terms of a year on false pretense charges.

She explained the delay: "I have so many engagements and Fritz desires to establish himself in Hamburg."

The intimation was that Miss Pons and the doctor can not look forward to much domesticity, for she intends to keep right on singing after marriage. The doctor, however, will quit the sea, where he has practiced for ten years, for a clinic in Hamburg. He is from an aristocratic Westphalian family.

recently was freed on parole at Madison, Wis., under a suspended sentence for harboring Dillinger. Waterloo authorities were questioning her as to the identity of the other couple, but did not disclose what progress they had made.

The wounded man said to officers: "I've got $700 on me. Be sure the little girl gets it. She doesn't know what it is all about."

Tip Results in Capture.

Acting on a tip, the officers had been watching a parked car which they were told had been in the vicinity a week. As the couple approached it the officers attempted to arrest the man.

Police said the man reached for a gun. Walker grappled with him and Steffen fired several shots as the man broke away. Walker also fired several shots.

In the car officers found an automatic rifle with 300 rounds of ammunition, a doctor's complete first-aid kit and automobile license plates from Missouri, Illinois and Minnesota.

Carroll, wanted in connection with at least two slayings, has long been identified as one of Dillinger's lieutenants. Included in the crimes for which he is sought are:

A machine-gun raid on a Brainerd, Minn., bank more than a year ago that netted the robbers $32,000.

The robbery of the Security National Bank at Sioux Falls, S. Dak., March 6.

The robbery of the First National Bank at Mason City, Iowa, March 13.

A postoffice robbery at La Crosse, Wis., where he jumped $15,000 bond.

Mechanic "Tips" Police.

It was a trivial thing that tripped up Carroll—minor trouble to his automobile. Carroll drove his car to a garage, asking a mechanic to fix it. The mechanic grew suspicious when he noted extra license plates and weapons in the machine. As soon as he completed his work he notified police.

Detectives Emil Steffen and P. E. Walker spotted the car parekd in the city. Screened from view of passersby, they watched the machine until Carroll and his girl-bride returned to it.

House Group Postpones Botanic Garden Action

Crowds Watch Calvert Street Bridge Moving

Holiday Air Prevails as Span Shifts 80 Feet; Ready Tomorrow.

advantage of the crowds and favorable weather, did a rushing business in drinks and ice cream.

Probably the least excited of anyone was John P. Eichleay, of Pittsburgh, who held the subcontract for moving the bridge. A straw-hatted general, shouting orders on the east side and the west side and down below, he was almost everywhere at the same time, sometimes grabbing a jackhandle himself if there were a laborer shy.

While a major job, picking up, sliding and setting down Calvert Street Bridge was not an uncertain or dangerous operation, according to the bronzed Eichleay. Of course, its advanced age and 130-foot height were complicating factors, but nothing to cause alarm, he said.

100 Men on the Job.

About 100 men—skilled mechanics, laborers, surveyors, engineers and "bosses"—were on the job from 5 a. m., when the preliminary step of cutting loose the car tracks with acetylene torches was finished, until gongs announced the bridge was in place at 4:30.

Riding with the structure were telephone cables containing more than 8,400 wires. For weeks, cable splicers had been cutting in loops in the cables so that when the trip began the slack in the loops would allow the cables attached to the bridge to move along with it.

The outstanding attraction, aside from the movement of the bridge itself, was the team of five stout horses, which formed a live merry-go-round at the windlasses. Many were the comments that this was cruelty to animals. Actually, however, through the efficiency of block-and-tackle equipment with which the windlasses were rigged, their labors were less rigorous than pulling a brewery wagon.

Few spectators realized the five beasts were being aided by 15 carloads of equipment, consisting of steel rails, rollers, jackscrews and other devices.

16 I. P. M. Is Top Speed.

With all these and the horses and the crews of barrel-chested laborers, the bridge got up a maximum speed of 16 inches a minute. But the minutes were few when 16 inches was covered, interruptions being frequent to make adjustments ordered by engineers.

There was no 16-inch-a-minute speed at the start. It took a quarter of an hour to make the first half a foot. At 9 a. m. the slender span, strangely deserted of its clanging trolleys and honking autos, had gone 4 feet. At 10:15 it was only 4 yards downstream. Then Eichleay stepped on the accelerator.

Sure of his ground now, the contractor called for more speed which saw the spreading mass of steel and stone move 29 feet between 10:20 a. m. and noon. It was during this period the swarms of curious got the best run for their money.

Finish Ahead of Schedule.

When the lunch hour ended at 1 p. m., the span was just past the half-way mark. The rapid progress continued to such an extent that the job was finished hours ahead of schedule, to the disappointment of home-going Government workers who had hoped to see the bridge walking.

Among the interested spectators at one time or another were Commissioners Melvin C. Hazen and John C. Gotwals. John W. Cowper, general contractor for the entire moving and construction project, was on hand throughout the day to give his personal supervision.

Ralph Modjeski, Frank M. Masters and M. B. Case, who designed the new Calvert street bridge, also were present. Chosen only after months of wrangling, their design calls for a multiple-arch masonry structure which will conform in appearance to the Taft Bridge nearby. It will be erected in the exact location of the old one.

House Passes Bill Providing Jobless Census

G.O.P. Charges Measure to Create 105,000 Places Is Vote Bribe.

It took a special rule and a little parliamentary jockeying to do it, but Democrats put their census job bill through the House yesterday by a vote of 218 to 145.

It was the same bill the Republicans defeated the other day. They charged it was just a bald-faced effort to buy the fall elections with 105,000 census jobs.

Yesterday they repeated the charges, adding a few new ones. Pained, the Democrats said it wasn't so. All they want to do is count the number of unemployed, then find jobs for them.

"Says you," retorted the minority.

Plenty of Temper.

Everybody got mad at everybody else, and in the excitement they even threw out a harmless amendment by Representative Fred Britten, that innocently read:

"Each census enumerator shall display a badge, upon which shall appear the following: 'I am a Democratic campaign worker paid out of funds previously appropriated to feed hungry people.'"

When the dust had cleared away, tallies showed 217 Democrats and 1 Farmer-Laborite for the bill; 44 Democrats and 2 Farmer-Laborites voting with 99 Republicans against it.

All but a few amendments were shouted down. Vainly, Minority Leader Snell tried to move the date of the census up from November 12 to July 23. If Democrats were really sincere about not wanting to buy votes with jobs at election time, he said they would vote for his amendment. They voted it down, 102 to 61.

Alaskan Delegate Anthony Dimond succeeded in including Alaska and Hawaii in the scope of the legislation. The census, which would cost about $10,000,000, will cover not only unemployment, but agriculture and live stock.

Called Vote-Getting Plan.

"This is nothing but an attempt to control Congressional elections by use of funds for employment of voters," declared James W. Wadsworth (Republican), New York.

"In all of my political experience I never heard of anything like it. Between 200 and 800 persons in each congressional district who hope to get the jobs can be expected to show a lively sense of appreciation at the polls."

Minority Leader Snell wanted to know if President Roosevelt was behind the bill.

"It's unfair," responded Representative Ralph Lozier, Missouri Democrat and author of the bill, "to try to put Mr. Roosevelt in a 'spot' on everything that comes up here."

It was Chairman William Connery of the labor committee, who said the Democrats wanted to find out who the unemployed were, so they could find jobs for them. The chortles of his Republican colleagues drowned out his speech.

Sabotage Hint Given in Probe Of Liner Fire

Spontaneous Combustion More Likely, However, Says Skipper.

Honolulu, June 7 (AP).—A possibility that attempts at sabotage were to blame for the fire at sea on the Dollar liner President Lincoln was expressed by Capt. George Yardley today after the ship raced into Honolulu with her lifeboats swinging from the davits, and many of the passengers wearing life preservers.

The fire, which broke out in the hold of the vessel last night imperiling nearly 400 persons aboard, was brought under control by the crew, before the liner reached port.

Capt. Yardley, skipper of the Lincoln, said the blaze probably was caused by spontaneous combustion in the inflammable cargo, but that there was a possibility of sabotage having been attempted.

Two military airplanes shipped by the Curtiss-Wright Corporation and destined for the Chinese government were in the still blazing hold when the ship reached port. The planes had been stored near the point where the fire broke out.

Escorted into the harbor by the Navy tug Sunaddin, the ship docked at dawn with the cargo in her main hold still smouldering. The Navy tug, which had stood by off Koko Head, near the harbor entrance, throughout the night ready to give aid, immediately began pumping water into the smoking compartment, and Honolulu firemen rigged hoses to assist in the fight.

News that the liner was afire was made known to the 172 passengers at the captain's dinner. Capt. Yardley assured the passengers there was no cause for alarm, but instructed them to return quietly to their staterooms and put on life preservers.

Soon smoke was pouring into many cabins in the after part of the vessel, and the passengers took to the decks. There they remained until midnight, while the crew, numbering 226, battled the blaze with live steam, and finally got it in hand. The lifeboats were made ready as the crew fought.

The ship was about 150 miles out of Honolulu, westbound from San Pedro, when the fire was discovered in a hold which contained cotton as a part of the cargo.

Four vessels prepared to go to the aid of the Lincoln when word of the fire was broadcast.

Whitten Buried In Albemarle; Sick Two Days

Owner of "Limestone" Had Been a Leader in County Affairs.

Charlottesville, Va., June 7 (Spl.).—George Hardon Whitten, well-known agriculturist and leading resident of Albemarle County, who died yesterday at University Hospital, after a two days' illness was buried at 3 p. m. today from Grace Episcopal Church, at Cismont, the service being conducted by the rector, the Rev. Francis L. Robinson. Interment was in the church cemetery, with the Masons in charge.

Mr. Whitten was born and reared in Pittsburgh, son of the late Robert Quail and Sarah (Anshutz) Whitten, and was 56 years of age. The family first came to Virginia in 1900 and purchased La Fourche, noted estate located between Shadwell and Keswick.

After spending two years in Florida, George Whitten entered the employ of the United States Steel Corporation and was located in Pittsburgh and San Francisco for several years. Returning to Albemarle some 17 years ago he purchased Limestone, where he engaged in agricultural pursuits.

Mr. Whitten took an active interest in county affairs. He was president of the Production Credit Association, this city; former member of the board of directors of the county Chamber of Commerce, and chairman of the Albemarle County Debt Adjustment Committee. He was secretary of the Keswick Hunt Club, and for years had served as manager of the clubs' horse shows.

Mr. Whitten was one of the leaders of the Republican party in this section of the State.

He married Miss Georgia Purvis, daughter of the late O. W. Purvis, of this county. She survives, with one son, P. H. Whitten.

Road Route Called Bad for Business

Letter Sent Fredericksburg Chamber Head.

Fredericksburg, Va., June 7 (Spl.).—A letter condemning the proposed routing of traffic around rather than through Fredericksburg as "disastrous to business interests of the community" was written today by City Councilman John F. Gouldman, jr., local banker and business man, to Benjamin T. Pitts, president of the chamber of commerce.

Copies of Mr. Gouldman's letter were sent to all members of the chamber's board of directors, in answer to a petition signed by almost 100 residents on Princess Anne street, the street now bearing through traffic through the city. The petition urges Commissioners H. G. Shirley of the State highway commission to bring about a route change. The same citizens, it is understood, are now agitating to urge the city council to pass an ordinance prohibiting trucks from parking in residential sections along the route.

Mr. Gouldman's letter vigorously opposed such a traffic change, which he has declared would be of great harm to Fredericksburg business and seriously reduce the value of Princess Anne street property.

Somerset County Calls Grand Jury

Policeman's Slaying Set for Investigation.

Princess Anne, Md., June 7 (Spl.).—The Somerset County grand jury will convene here Monday, an order having been issued today by Judge Robert F. Duer.

Witnesses have been summoned to testify in the case of Howard McClendon, alias Howard McClelland, colored, charged with the murder of Policeman Harry Daugherty, at Crisfield, April 29. Daugherty died in McCready Memorial Hospital from wounds about the head said to have been inflicted by McClelland with a chisel. McClelland was captured by Sheriff Daugherty and taken to Baltimore for safekeeping. Officers here refuse to state whether McClelland will be brought to Princess Anne Monday.

The belief here is that he will waive arraignment and that his case will be transferred possibly to Dorchester County. Several cases of assault with intent to kill will come before the grand jury Monday and one case of bookmaking against Louis B. McClemmy, Princess Anne.

Attack Victim Is Given Rest

Police Hope for Clearer Story of Fatal Assault.

Fredericksburg, Va., June 7 (Spl.).—Department of Justice operatives have decided not to question Milton J. Brown, recuperating victim of the assault two weeks ago in which his fiancee, Miss Fannie Kurz, was killed in Battlefield Park here, uhtil he has had several days of complete rest.

Questionings of the last few days have brought from the patient repeated references to a North Carolinian working in a filling station here and living in a Main street boarding house. Detectives have found no trace of any person resembling Brown's description, and are ceasing their interrogations to allow the victim's unstable mind to rest.

Physicians say that if Brown is not questioned for several days he may forget this story and relate one with more truth, whereas if he is continually questioned with that on his mind he will never be able to reach a more accurate decription of the attack.

Last night, for the first time definitely on record, Washington operatives stayed all night in the city, leading to the belief that they might be approaching a solution to the greatest mystery in Fredericksburg police history.

Defendant Winner In Grease Job Suit

Charge Bearings Burned Out as Results Loses.

Winchester, Va., June 7 (Spl.).—A damage suit in a local court involving the liability of a garageman for the perfection with which a motor-greasing job is done with respect to subsequent mechanical trouble has ended in a verdict for the defendant.

C. E. and T. R. Huff brought suit against the Texas Co. for $100 on the ground that the latter did not grease the formers' truck properly, and that as a result the bearings of the truck were burned out. The defendant claimed that the greasing job was according to the best standards and that the bearings burnt out because they were defective and the truck was roughly and improperly used.

Judge Philip Williams, hearing the case in corporation court, dismissed the suit with costs on the Huffs on the ground that the plaintiffs had not proven their case.

Mrs. Roosevelt Inspects Pet Home Project

First Lady on West Virginia Tour of Reclamation of Idle Families.

Terra Alta, W. Va., June 7 (Spl.). Happy in the renewed hope glimpsed in the eyes of hundreds of subsistence homesteaders, Mrs. Franklin Delano Roosevelt boarded a Baltimore & Ohio train at 6:30 p. m. today on her return trip to Washington after one of the most varied days in her career as First Lady of the land.

Mrs. Roosevelt, with a party of 30, including Mrs. Harold L. Ickes, Bernard Baruch, and various Government experts, visited two of her pet projects, the first Federal subsistence homestead plant at Arthurdale, near Reedsville in Preston County; the newer like project under way in the Tygarts Valley beyond Elkins, the annual commencement of Davis and Elkins College in that city, a dozen other mountain towns in five counties of the State, and various other points of interest.

The chief purpose of Mrs. Roosevelt's trip was to view the progress made at Arthurdale, where she found 50 homesteaders living in neatly built and comfortably furnished homes, a community center building, an exhibition building, a postoffice, 12 miles of road, growing gardens and farm crops and two workshops nearing completion.

Aids Idle Miners.

More homes are to be built here to house jobless coal miners, chiefly from the Scott's Run district of Monongalia County, to give them a chance to win their way back to self-support and independence from a distressing existence, caused by the chaos in the soft coal mining industry.

But she was equally interested in the Tygarts Valley project, just barely getting under way, where like opportunity is to be given stranded lumbermen in an experiment into which, along with Arthurdale and other similar projects, the Federal Government has arranged to pour millions of dollars in a social improvement investment. Ultimately 270 families will get their fighting chance on the 2,800 acres of this picturesque valley area, lying between the Cheat and Rich Mountain chains.

Cooperation Urged.

At the college commencement Mrs. Roosevelt urged the graduates to seek happy and successful careers, in spite of handicaps resulting from depression, by making themselves socially useful.

At both projects Mrs. Roosevelt declared cooperative action was the key for their success.

"You have a great responsibility," she said. "You are beginning what we hope will be a new kind of rural life, where people may own their homes and live in communities that are really helpful to the country. If we can make rural life secure, if we can enable people to earn their living and at the same time have an interesting life that gives happiness and security, these projects will succeed."

Fatal Train Wreck Probed

Three Persons Are Killed; Spreading Rail Held Disaster Cause.

Baltimore, June 7 (Spl.).—Two investigations were begun today into wrecking of a Pennsylvania Railroad train last night near Parkton. Three persons, two trainmen and a woman passenger, lost their lives.

George M. Smith, superintendent of the Baltimore division, said that he believed spreading rails caused the train to leave the tracks. Officials of Baltimore County are conducting an investigation.

Bodies of the two trainmen were recovered today from waters of Little Gunpowder River, into which the train plunged from a trestle 25 feet high. The engine and a passenger coach dived into the rocky stream bed, while a second passenger coach remained on the bridge, saving the lives of three trainmen riding in it.

The dead are:

Miss Margaret Frederick, of Parkton, who was a passenger in the coach which fell into the stream; T. F. Bossom, the engineer, and J. A. Blauser, the fireman.

No attempt was made, however, after the arrival of troops.

C. Ralph Strobel, head of the Wayne relief organization, said it was complained that some persons have not received what the group considered adequate work or relief.

Mill Workers Delay Strike For Election

Hope to Defeat Hopewell Mayor; Accuse Owners of Obstruction.

Richmond, June 7 (Spl.).—While union workers at the Tubize Chattillon rayon plant in Hopewell today awaited word from the National Labor Board before deciding whether to call the strike for which they already have voted, it became known that there will be no walkout until a new mayor and city council are elected next Tuesday.

The workers who are qualified voters are trying to defeat Dr. D. Lane Elder, the mayor, up for reelection, and Maj. W. B. Davis, a member of the council. Maj. Davis is safety engineer of the Tubize plant.

Call Officials "Enemies."

The union is not operating politically against Dr. Elder and Maj. Davis, for technically it is nonpartisan, but most of the workers and their sympathizers are working against them as individuals on the idea that the officials are enemies.

Latest developments include:

Statement by George E. Moorehouse, organizer of the United Textile Workers of America, that the international is trying to "hold off any action that would bring about a strike," but that the plant management is not cooperating in attempts to reach an understanding.

Word from David A. Harrison, jr., Tubize attorney and spokesman before the Labor Board, that he wrote the board June 2, saying the company was "not willing to place discharged employes on a preferred list to be rehired before any new employes were put on," because such a plan would "put the company in the position of abandoning the merit system."

Resignation from the executive committee of the local union, and from the union by A. B. Hall, powerhouse engineer of the Tubize plant, who sent a copy of the resignation to Raymond S. Burrows, plant manager. Mr. Hall said:

Fact Distortion Charged.

"I have taken this action because I am satisfied with working conditions and the treatment which I have received in the past as an employe of Tubize Chattillon Corporation. I am not in sympathy with the efforts of former employes of the company and organizers from out of town to make trouble and cause other employes and me to lose our wages during a strike, and possibly permanently lose our jobs. I do not care to take any responsibility for forcing idleness and loss of wages upon people who are willing to work under present working conditions."

The Moorhouse statement charged Plant Manager Burrows with "distortion of facts," and said "a settlement of the difficulties at Hopewell can be made." It continued:

"A settlement can be made without any hardship on either side if a little common sense and good reasoning has an opportunity to enter into the picture. Let us separate the bombastic statements from the facts and we find there is very little to argue about.

State Bankers Meet, Voicing Note of Cheer

Trials to Fade Away Under New Deal, President Declares.

Norfolk, Va., June 7 (Spl.).—"Our difficulties will fade away under the new deal," Samuel H. Plummer, of Newport News, president of the Virginia Bankers Association, said in an address before that body when it opened its forty-first annual convention at the Cavalier Hotel, Virginia Beach, today.

Mr. Plummer's address was a part of the morning session of the convention, which heard reports from other officers as follows:

C. W. Beerbower, Roanoke, secretary; T. D. Neal, Richmond, treasurer; J. Randolph Tucker, attorney, while committees submitted reports in this order: W. H. Schwarzchild, sr., Richmond, on taxation; R. S. Cecil, Pulaski, architecture; J. M. Ball, Richmond, bank protection and insurance. Dr. Harold Stonier, educational director of the American Institute of Banking, spoke on "Public Relations."

The afternoon session included a bank insurance forum, with Mr. Ball presiding, and James E. Daum, of New York, secretary of the insurance committee of the American Bankers Association, reporting on data concerning the organization of a surety company for banks only.

Discussing the Federal deposit insurance act, President Plummer reported that on March 5 last the banks in the State holding 99 per cent of the deposits were insured. In fact, of the 200 State banks in Virginia all but nine are members of the F. I. D. C., and all of the National banks are affiliated as required by law.

The 329 banks in Virginia, State and National, had deposits totaling $398,278,233, of which it is estimated 41 per cent or $163,000,000 are insured. During the five months the deposit insurance law has been in effect not a single bank in Virginia has been taken over by the Federal corporation, which led Mr. Plummer to remark: "While many of us were antagonistic to the guaranty provision of the banking act, we have to admit it is working well so far, and it is sincerely hoped that the fine record will be maintained.

"Although we might not be in accord with all the policies of the New Deal, I believe that under the leadership of that great man, President Roosevelt, whose courage and determination seem inconquerable, and with the continued loyalty of the people of this country, our difficulties will soon fade away and the storms of the past few years will largely be forgotten."

County Backs Up Radcliffe

Roosevelt Supporter Asked to Run for Governor in Maryland.

Leonardtown, Md., June 7 (Spl.). Calvert County has entered the "draft Radcliffe for Governor" movement started by Senator Millard E. Tydings. It is the tenth county to indorse the movement.

A statement, signed by 18 Democratic leaders, reads:

"Feeling that a primary contest between Gov. Ritchie and Mayor Jackson is not only fraught with serious consequences for the Democratic party, but will endanger the success of local tickets in many sections of the State in general elections, we hereby strongly recommend that these candidates withdraw and that George L. Radcliffe, Roosevelt leader in Maryland, be nominated for Governor.

"We feel," it continued, "that such action will make victory in November certain, strengthen the Democratic party, and that Mr. Radcliffe, as Governor, will give the people of Maryland an outstanding administration."

Delegates Row On War Issue

Methodist Conference Sees Split on Resolution; Armaments Hit.

Baltimore, June 7 (Spl.).—Delegates to the annual Baltimore Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church today split over adoption of a resolution dealing with war.

Failing in attempts to revise the resolution on the floor, the delegates returned it to the committee for alteration.

Resolutions dealing with relief, old-age pensions, racial prejudices and methods of meeting the economic crisis will be discussed tomorrow.

'Airplane Baby's' Life Staked On Delicate Brain Operation

Baltimore, June 7 (Spl.).—Another ill "airplane baby" was to undergo an operation tonight at the Johns Hopkins Hospital, with Dr. Walter Dandy, famed brain surgeon, wielding the healing knife.

Three-year-old Martha Ann Greenwood, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. A. B. Greenwood, of Asheville, N. C., was brought here last night in a plane, and is to undergo an operation for the removal of a brain abscess. She is reported seriously ill.

An attack of measles several weeks ago caused the abscess, Dr. Greenwood believes. Six days ago at her Asheville home she lapsed into a coma, and her father phoned to Dr. Dandy, who last night advised that she be brought here for the operation.

Martha Ann's father took her by auto to Greenville, on the main line of the Eastern Air Transport, and she was placed aboard one of the giant ships operating between New York City and the South. The plane had been held for 45 minutes awaiting her arrival.

With Pilot Dick Merrill at the controls and the baby cared for by Miss Ann Justice, a trained nurse, the plane roared through the night to Washington Airport, despite fog and low ceiling near Richmond. The 40-mile trip from Washington to Baltimore was made in 17 minutes.

The baby was transferred to the hospital in an ambulance, and after an examination, Dr. Dandy said he probably will operate tonight. Martha Ann is the fourth baby to be flown to the Johns Hopkins for an emergency operation since last winter.

Sellers Will Take Command At Naval Academy June 19

Annapolis, Md., June 7 (Spl.).—Admiral David F. Sellers, commander in chief of the fleet, who has been selected for duty as superintendent of the Naval Academy, succeeding Rear Admiral Thomas C. Hart, will take over the post, June 19, four days after he relinquishes fleet command, according to present plans. Admiral Hart will go to sea as commander of one of the divisions of the fleet.

The transfer of high command at the academy will be one of many changes among ranking, as well as junior officers, to take place at the naval institution before the next academic term in October. One change in administration personnel became effective today when Lieut. Comdr. Theodore T. Patterson, who will be aid to Admiral Sellers, relieved Lieut. Comdr. Lynde D. McCormick, who served three years in that capacity under Admiral Hart. McCormick soon will go to sea as navigating officer of the cruiser Marblehead.

A medical examining board convened at the academy today and began physical examinations of candidates for admission as midshipmen, who qualified in mental tests in February and April. The prospective middies will report in groups of 50 daily. It is estimated the new fourth class will have 550 members.

The torpedo boat destroyer Childs has arrived at the academy to be used in connection with special instruction of senior classmen in engineering. This class will pass the greater portion of the summer here. Their special course also includes navigation and aviation and flight tactics.

Liquor Board Ignores Local Option Stand

Continues to Ship in Reply to Mail Orders and Awaits Events.

Richmond, June 7 (Spl.).—The Alcoholic Beverage Control Board today continued to ship liquor to all parts of the State in response to mail orders, saying that it has drafted no policy regarding shipments into territory that may hereafter vote themselves dry pursuant to the local option clauses of the liquor control bill.

The board had nothing further to say about charges before two Methodist district conferences that it is violating the principle of local option with its mail order system, and that the liquor interests are in control of the State.

Dr. Fred R. Chenault, of Danville, speaking at Halifax, and the Rev. W. S. Deyerle, of Richmond, speaking here, made the attacks upon the State's liquor control system. Both are veteran dry crusaders and chairmen of their district committees on temperance and social service. Dr. Chenault also is chairman of the State committee.

During the recent Assembly, when the A. B. C. law was being prepared, the local option question was recognized as a major problem, but provision was made whereby a locality, on petition of one-third of the qualified voters, might hold an election, voting itself either bone dry or dry so far as the establishment of State stores was concerned.

Danville thus far is the only locality in which an election has been called. It is set for July 17.

The number of persons arrested in Richmond, on charges of being drunk, has shown only a slight increase since the opening of the liquor stores on May 15, according to the monthly report of arrests here.

During May, according to the report, 438 drunks were arrested, as compared with 415 in April and 422 in March. The total for May, however, was nearly twice as large as the number or arrest in May of last year, when 247 persons were taken into custody on charges of drunkenness.

Meanwhile the liquor board today issued a new price list which includes nine new imported cordials, four new straight whiskies, 2 new bottled-in-bond whiskies, 2 new blends, 1 rum, 1 gin, 1 Scotch and 1 domestic champagne. Prices have been revised on 11 items—mostly by reductions of 5 and 10 cents per bottle.

The new list becomes effective Saturday and the board specified that all mail orders should be made from the new list.

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE—
WITHOUT CALOMEL
And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go

If you feel sour and sunk and the world looks punk, don't swallow a lot of salts, mineral water, oil, laxative candy or chewing gum and expect them to make you suddenly sweet and buoyant and full of sunshine.

For they can't do it. They only move the bowels and a mere movement doesn't get at the cause. The reason for your down-and-out feeling is your liver. It should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily.

If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. You have a thick, bad taste and your breath is foul. Skin often breaks out in blemishes. Your head aches and you feel down and out. Your whole system is poisoned.

It takes those good, old CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS to get these two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up." They contain wonderful, harmless, gentle vegetable extracts, amazing when it comes to making the bile flow freely.

But don't ask for liver pills. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills. Look for the name Carter's Little Liver Pills on the red label. Resent a substitute. 25c at drug stores. © 1931 C. M. Co.

—a reason

FRANKLY, one of the chief reasons why I enjoy Chesterfield is the fact that I don't get little crumbs of tobacco in my mouth.

Rarely ever do I find a Chesterfield that isn't well filled. The tobacco in them seems to be of the right length, and they must be the right size because they burn right and smoke right.

I like them also because they are milder.

Labor Problems At Geneva.

Sixty nations, including the United States, are represented at the session of the International Labor Conference, which opened at Geneva last Monday.

The annual gathering of this League of Nations' technical agency, which held its first meeting in Washington in 1919, is this year of perhaps especial importance. For the agenda, to which nearly a month of discussion will be devoted, concentrates on those recovery measures which in one shape or form are now being tried out in every industrial nation. Mutual interchange of experiences and viewpoints on such issues as public works programs, unemployment insurance, work-spreading through shorter hours and improvement of statistical information can scarcely fail to be advantageous to the various delegations, and, therefore, to the countries which send them.

The value of this pooling of economic knowledge is heightened by the tripartite set-up which characterizes the International Labor Organization. An industrial congress which represents governments, employers and organized labor on equal footing is closer to realities, more interested in its agenda, less concerned with political maneuvering, than are such essentially diplomatic gatherings as the disarmament conference. In its steadfast campaign to improve international relations by harmonizing and raising national industrial standards, the International Labor Organization has earned the gratitude of many who have little conception of the character of its patient and largely unadvertised effort.

The delegation of official observers appointed by President Roosevelt to attend last year's conference recommended "that the United States affiliate with the international labor office so as to be in a position to be in full collaboration with the other 58 countries that comprise this organization."

It is reported that an even stronger recommendation to this end may be brought back by this year's delegates, headed by Hugh Hanna, of the Department of Labor. The word "affiliation" is one which needs exact definition. But its general meaning of close cooperation with a non-political organization devoted to improvement of international standards is an aim approved in principle by the last three Administrations, regardless of party lines. And the complete divorce of the International Labor Organization from the political work of Geneva is emphasized at this conference by the active participation of Brazil and Japan, both nations which have resigned from League membership.

The Intermediate Census.

Widely different opinions of the Administration's census bill are being expressed on Capitol Hill and elsewhere. Leaders in the House, who suffered temporary defeat on this measure when the "gag" rule performed a boomerang trick, but later railroaded it through, insist that it is vital to the success of various recovery agencies. A vigorous minority claims that it is merely a rich plum pudding for job seekers, designed for serving just at election time.

Lack of information that would be valuable to numerous Federal agencies may well be conceded. It is four years since the last census was taken. Population has shifted and extensive changes in the economic status of various groups have taken place. Distribution of relief funds, for example, is complicated when the exact population of counties and towns and States is not available.

Moreover, the patronage features of the census plan may have been exaggerated. The entire undertaking would be directed by the Census Bureau. Employes at the central office would be chosen through Civil Service examinations. Officials of the bureau insist that no use would be made of the spoils system in selecting enumerators throughout the country.

The Administration proposes to spend $7,540,000 for a limited census beginning in November, 1934. A great deal may be said in favor of such a census in 1935, to bring the most important enumerations of 1930 up to date. But why would a count of the unemployed, of cattle, &c., be more important next fall than during any other autumn? By undertaking a project of this kind on the eve of an election, four years instead of five after the last decennial census, it takes on the appearance of a patronage scheme whether or not it was so planned.

Congress ought to consider, also, whether the information collected in the proposed census would be of more than passing value. A count of the unemployed next November would be out of date in a few months. Statistics of this sort are useful only if they are constantly revised in accordance with changing conditions. The cost of the proposed census would be much greater than the entire annual appropriation for the United States Employment Service. Probably this money could be more wisely spent for the development of adequate statistical machinery in that agency. In such fashion, rather than by counting noses at census time other industrial countries keep check on the extent and nature of their unemployment.

Extending Farm Controls.

A squabble between distinguished members of the same party over the meaning of legislation designed to "clarify" existing law offers rather convincing evidence that the measure does not serve the purpose for which it was intended. To Chester C. Davis, administrator of the AAA, the purpose of the farm control bill now before Congress is "to eliminate the ambiguities" in the present act. To Senator Byrd it means creation of a bureaucratic dictatorship "over every one who produces agricultural products and over every one who handles agricultural products." These controversial interpretations alone are sufficient to justify a healthy skepticism of the AAA amendments.

For the most part the changes sought by the AAA are related to agricultural marketing agreements. Under the present law the Secretary of Agriculture may enter into such contracts with processors, associations of producers or others engaged in handling farm crops "in the current of interstate or foreign commerce." In this way marketing conditions may be regulated and prices may be fixed.

"But," says Administrator Davis, "the objectives of marketing agreements can not be attained unless means of enforcement are provided with which to hold recalcitrant minorities of processors, and distributors refusing to agree, in line with the program adopted for the general welfare. Hence licenses afford the means of enforcement without which marketing agreements would be futile." This argument has a familiar sound. The AAA has discovered that voluntary agreements have rather severe limitations. Consequently, it moves another step in the direction of coercion.

Officials emphatically deny that the proposed amendments constitute regimentation. Yet Mr. Davis himself, in recounting the virtues of the licensing system, says: "In addition licenses can be used in lieu of agreements (italics ours) in those cases where the need of assistance to farmers is acute but agreements cannot be obtained." The AAA frankly intends to impose "agreements" upon processors without their consent. This may be mere clarification of the present law, but, if so, that statute is more in need of limitation than clarification.

As the amendments were first drawn they would have given the Secretary of Agriculture power to control all crops grown by farmers drawing curtailment benefits from the AAA. In response to vigorous criticism the language has now been changed so that the AAA could merely "prevent increases" in non-basic crops, such as fruits and vegetables. Nevertheless, this remains an extraordinary grant of power to any single official.

Another provision to which exception has been taken would permit the establishment of quotas for processors and distributors. Mr. Davis frankly admits that the purpose of this section is "to regulate the flow to market, prevent gluts, and increase the farmer's price." It is interesting chiefly as an indication of the extent to which centralized control over the food industries would be carried.

Fears that the AAA's proposed amendments would put agriculture under a complete dictatorship seem to be exaggerated. Yet the tendency of that agency to extend its powers over processors as well as farmers, and to substitute compulsory control for voluntary cooperation, is cause for grave apprehension. Principles and institutions are seldom crushed at a single blow. Rather they give way to persistent attrition. Hazy and ambiguous powers may be "clarified" into powerful weapons against individual freedom and initiative. It is in the light of basic principles, and with realization of the steady drift toward bureaucratic coercion, that these proposed changes must be considered.

Safeguarding The Open Door.

Some 35 years ago, when John Hay was Secretary of State, three great powers decided by treaty the future control of a small group of islands in the South Seas. The United States obtained the ownership of the magnificent harbor of Pago Pago, but most of Samoa was granted to Germany. Both powers guaranteed to each other and to Great Britain, which withdrew its claims of ownership, the maintenance of the Open Door in respect of commerce and navigation.

After the World War both the United States and New Zealand, the latter mandatory under the League of Nations for the former German possession, took steps inconsistent with the Open Door guaranty. A minor provision of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, resulted in extension to Samoa of the coastwise shipping laws of the United States, with consequent exclusion of vessels of other nationality from trade between the islands and American ports. This closed the door in respect of shipping. New Zealand, incidental to the administration of its mandate, extended its tariff laws to the mandated area. This closed the door in respect of commerce.

Trade between the Samoan Islands and the outside world is not extensive, and the interruption of the Open Door guaranty was regarded with indifference both here and in New Zealand. But indifference to the safeguarding of a principle of such importance is dangerous. It tends to imperil the entire Open Door policy and to give some excuse to more sensational violations of treaty obligations.

It is a matter of congratulation, therefore, that the Senate has agreed to a joint resolution, previously adopted by the House, declaring the coastwise shipping laws no longer applicable to American Samoa. We are now in a position to say frankly that New Zealand should show a similar regard for its national honor by promptly altering its tariff law so as to restore the Open Door in western Samoa.

Quite apart from treaty obligations, denial of the Open Door policy is in contravention of the principle of trusteeship upon which the mandate system of the League of Nations is based. It encourages a casual attitude toward international agreements, particularly undesirable on the part of nations which have been critical of Japan on that score.

The Test Of The Law.

Administration of the securities act of 1933 and the securities exchange act of 1934 is to be vested in a commission of five men who will be given extraordinary powers to regulate the issuance and sale of securities. Although the laws which they will be called upon to enforce are defective in many respects, they have been amended to eliminate the most objectionable features. It is believed, therefore, that, given efficient administration, existing abuses can be curbed without creating new abuses of a more disastrous character.

The efficacy of all regulatory laws depends upon the way in which they are interpreted and applied by those charged with responsibility for their execution. In the present instance, the extensive discretionary powers bestowed upon the new securities and exchange commission make the selection of its membership a matter of more than usual importance. If the appointees are primarily concerned to bring about recovery by assisting revival of the private capital market, with reasonable safeguards against manipulative procedure, neither business nor the organized stock exchanges need fear the restrictive and punitive provisions of the law. On the other hand, if reform at any price is the aim of the Commissioners, it lies within their power to work irreparable damage to the community as a whole.

In making appointments to this highly important commission, therefore, the President will show whether or not the Administration is more interested in the termination of improper practices, or in far-reaching changes for which the elimination of abuses is only a convenient excuse. The choice lies between constructive regulation designed to encourage investment activities, and repressive regulation that, in the name of reform, destroys the patient. If the former type of procedure is assured by the appointment of experienced men with a reputation for fair dealing, a revival of the market for new capital issues can confidently be predicted. Moreover, the feared deflationary effects of stock market regulation will be neutralized by the resultant stimulus given to investment buying and selling.

The existence of a large potential investment demand for new capital offerings is evidenced by the avidity with which public issues are absorbed by investors with no alternative employment for surplus funds. Many concerns are in need of capital to make the repairs and replacements delayed by several years of depression. Opportunities for profitable utilization of new capital, moreover, will increase as investment buying proceeds and provides the stimulus required to revive the heavy industries. The high degree of unemployment which prevails in these industries is a source of anxiety to the Administration and is directly or indirectly responsible for continuous and heavy drains upon public relief funds. Consequently, the cheapest and most efficacious way to further recovery lies in the removal of obstacles to a revival of the private capital market.

A beginning has been made by eliminating the most obstructive features of the existing Federal regulatory legislation. The work of restoration should be furthered by assigning the task of regulation under the revised laws to men who can be trusted to exercise their delegated powers with restraint as well as with intelligence.

Radio Enunciator.

Down in Puerto Rico a radio announcer has a lot to answer for. He was broadcasting the news the other evening and came to the interesting announcement that all hunting would be prohibited after June 10. Beginning the very next day, couple after couple came rushing in from the country to get married.

The broadcast was in Spanish. Some toothy announcer, probably more interested in the crooning effect of his voice than in its clarity, came upon the brief message. Taking a firm stance before the microphone he read it off. But, it seems, the word caza means hunting, while the word casar means to marry. And that caused all the trouble.

Well, we'd hate to be in that announcer's shoes. Think of the poor countrymen who were rushed into wedlock, fearful that they only had a few more days before marriage would be illegal. Marry in haste, regret at leisure, is the old saying. Perhaps had it not been for that fateful broadcast many a once-happy fellow would still be enjoying single blessedness.

The dispatch which told of this terrible situation ended by saying that the hunting law, which the announcer was announcing but not enunciating, marks the beginning of a closed season on all game. But not, we venture, on Puerto Rican radio announcers. The open season on them has just begun.

Delay Advocated.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Relative to your editorial, "An Obligation of Honor," published in The Post of June 4, I invite your attention to articles in Indian Truth for March, April and May, with further comments made by the Indian Rights Association on the changed bill and substitute.

We feel that it would be far better to have the main features of the bill go over until the next Congress, in order that the Indians now quoted as favoring the measure could be given an opportunity to consider the many changes made in the original measure without their knowledge, and further that instead of having a hastily drawn bill jammed through under pressure, the proponents of the bill should take time to draft something that would not invite complications and grief in the future.

Every effort, however, should be concentrated on securing funds for the land purchases; increase in the appropriation for educational purposes, and the creation of a credit fund to help all Indians.

"Insanitary and Unsightly."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: How is it possible that the Southwest retail fruit and vegetable market has escaped the notice of the District officials. The insanitary conditions existing there and the unsightly squalor of the shacks, wrongly named market stalls, top anything of its kind seen in any market or public food center in the entire country.

The citizens of the Southwest and the buying public in general have been waiting some time to have this condition remedied, and a clean market, providing sanitary buying conditions, erected to replace this eyesore and disease-breeding spot that now passes for a market. This condition is no fault of the men operating the stalls. Surrounding conditions are beyond their control.

The right kind of a market can benefit the buying public, and it can provide a living for a number of persons. As it is now, business is at a standstill and the present market remains a health menace.

An Appreciation.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am directed by Mr. James G. Yaden, president of the Memorial Day Corporation, to express to your paper the appreciation of the corporation and the various allied and affiliated bodies, together with the patriotic societies interested therein, for the publicity you gave our recent Memorial Day exercises. We are quite confident that what you did for us inspired the throngs that attended the ceremonies. Some estimated the crowd to range from 30,000 to 50,000. These services, while colorful in nature, are still reverential and a tremendous proportion of our local population is interested in them. Your assistance in bringing the matter to their attention is greatly appreciated.

For the Memorial Day Corporation,

Director, representing the American Legion.

Editorial Aptitude.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your aptitude for picking the right subjects for editorial comment is almost uncanny. I have in mind two most appropriate ones which appeared June 1, "At Gettysburg" and "Drought vs. Planned Economy." The closing of the former is most excellent: "Encroachment on local and individual liberties, on the plan of eliminating sectionalism, may well be called encroachment on that freedom which Lincoln had in mind."

And in "Drought vs. Planned Economy" you certainly strike the keynote. This crop reduction business has been aptly termed, "Flirting with Famine." For amazing stupidity this scheme is probably without a parallel.

Uncle Sam continues to be a very sick man, but will undoubtedly pull through in due time, despite the vile nostrums he has had administered to him such as the New Deal, NRA, AAA, &c., ad nauseum. The President, I believe, has jestingly called himself "a tough guy." This is about the equivalent for "a bad egg." There is an old saying that "True words are often spoken in jest."

Forerunner of the Taxicab.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The hackney coach was the forerunner of the taxicab. The city of London with a population of 150,000 in 1663 regulated transportation by the hackney coach.

Thomas de Laune in his book entitled "Present State of London" (1683) gives the rates approved by public authorities in the following regulation:

"That no hackney-coachman so licensed shall presume to take for his hire in or about the cities of London and Westminster above 10 shillings for a day, reckoning 12 hours to the day; and by the hour not above 18 pence for the first hour, and 12 pence for every hour after; nor for his hire from any of the Inns of Courts, or thereabouts, to any part of St. James' or Westminster (except beyond Tuttle Street) above 12 pence, and the like from the same places to the Inns of Court, or thereabouts; nor from the Inns of Courts, or thereabouts, to the Royal Exchange, more than 12 pence; but if to the Tower, Bishopsgate-Street, Aldgate, or places thereabouts, 18 pence, and so from the same places to the said Inns of Court, as aforesaid."

Weeds of Washington.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It may be that 50,000,000 Frenchmen can't be wrong, but an American hobo was near the truth when he said some of the walks in Judiciary Square are a disgrace to our kultur. All the parks are full of weeds and never a care taken. If Mr. Hoover had said that weeds instead of grass would grow, he would have hit the nail on the head. Corn and coins are being thrown to the populace; it would seem they would include the clearing of weeds.

Passing along L street I noticed a large building, the side yard full of weeds. There were three dressy men standing in the doorway. They looked like they might be members of the Brain Trust conferring on how to send a pants presser to jail. A sign on the doorway, "Department of Justice." A church yard on H at Eighth full of weeds. Strolling by that Greek classic, the Supreme Court, and then by that marble monument to the immortal bard, I thought, "Millions for these and not one cent to get the weeds."

Unfair Advantage.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I noted recently the picture in The Post giving us the happy face of the little girl receiving the prize of $500 for spelling and by her side the rather serious countenance of the boy who received the prize of $300. Is an oral spelling bee a fair test? It is not and never can be. Again and again there is only the difference of one letter in a word. Take for instance words containing ei or ie. If it isn't one it is the other. The second speller has the advantage. If he or she had been given the word first the result might have been different.

I have seen so much unhappiness, and bitterness caused by oral spelling bees that they fill me with disgust. The only fair test of spelling is a written examination. But that, of course, would furnish no entertainment for an audience. And so probably such a test will never be made. We Americans are great for show, but not much for solidity.

FAIR PLAY.

Newsreel.

Because the actualities of the contemporary world are what they are, exceeding the farthest reaches of the dramatic fancy, a half-hour at one of the newsreel theaters these days is likely to provide a more complete catharsis than anything devised by the mind or imagination of Hollywood. The catharsis is achieved by the Elizabethan rather than the Greek mode, of course, for there are usually occasional rifts of the merely humorous or grotesque in the rapidly unrolling mist of terror. At the Embassy on Broadway one will see wholesale peasant grief in a Jugoslavian village after an explosion in a government mine, followed almost instantly by a slugging match between Roughhouse Riley and one of his colleagues on the West Coast. Communist May Day demonstrations in Paris, with police and workers engaged in a violent scramble, dissolve into a close-up of a spite fence erected by an Italian somewhere in this country in revenge for a neighbor's insult. So striking are some of these contrasts, in fact, that one can scarcely believe that they are unintentionally achieved. Surely there is an indication of a striving for some kind of effect in the following: The return to Austria of the Hapsburg Archduke Anton and his wife Ileana, surrounded by incense-swinging ecclesiastics and worshipful villagers; the winter carnival in Moscow—serried thousands of young athletes, male and female, moving along on skis or skating in circles to the admiration of other thousands of smiling, approving, and completely preoccupied spectators; a society race track in the South, with a close-up of two feverishly excited and rather dissipated-looking young people, one of whom is identified as the recent heir to one of the largest tobacco fortunes in America. Here everything depends, of course, on the recognition of items of contrast not easily translatable in other terms; between the expressions on the faces of the young men and women of the Red Square and the expressions on the faces of the Archduke Anton and the young tobacco prince are differences that lie too deep for words. Such conscious or unconscious effects of montage, however, do not constitute the sole interest; there are also the discordances within the single frame. Samuel Insull reads a little speech calculated to melt the hearts of all self-made Americans, but something in the eyes cancels out the whole effect. A close-up of Hitler addressing the two million gathered in the Templehof Field outside Berlin brings out features of that leader's oratorical technique which should never have been revealed to the foreign eye. And then there is in the newsreel at the Embassy a close-action sequence which alone makes this half-hour journey to the end of the night an experience that causes all recent cinema experiences to fade by comparison. A side street in Havana jammed with groups of excited students protesting against the government's May Day policy; a sudden rattle of machine-gun fire; the surprised groups scurrying in every direction, the wounded being carried off to shelter, the dead lying sprawled on the pavement. It is with relief that one closes one's eyes for a moment before reopening them to see the United States air-mail service being turned over again to private companies.

Out Where the Hex Begins

Postoffice, Friday.

THE "Hex" is still working in nearby Pennsylvania. A New Yorker has made a play about it and, of course, laid his scene in the Keystone State. Even a Pittsburgh newspaper complains that "hex-murder brings shame to the State" and lays all such crimes upon the vigorously scrubbed doorstep of the "Pennsylvania Dutch."

High time indeed that this common error was corrected! So, like all good soldiers in the NRA, "we do our part."

The very word "hex" is of non-Pennsylvania-Dutch origin. No Pennsylvania-Dutchman ever committed a "hex-murder." None of the persons in any way involved by these recent capital crimes is of Pennsylvania origin.

Let's be fair, however.

Although "hexing," or any belief in sorcery, has always been discountenanced by those Quakerish sects — the Mennonites, Amish, Dunkers—which compose the vast majority of the Pennsylvania Dutch, a certain amount of it has, from earliest times, prevailed among the backsliders and within the State's less rigid communities of remote habitat. But it is, as to both spirit and letter, a very different thing from "black witchcraft." When it is not a mere attempt toward healing by suggestion, it is "white witchcraft."

The very word "hex"—properly "hechs" in the "Dutch"—is of Spanish birth. It does come from a Spanish word meaning "spell-casting old woman." Yet it was applied to "hex-believers" by nonbelievers. The ritual involved was supposedly based upon some occult "Seventh Book of Moses." The late Prof. Henry Meyer, of Rebersburg, Pa., possessed quite the best and largest collection ever brought together of authentic and secret "hechs-buchs," the alleged sorcerers' text-books: a careful study of them disclosed not one mention of the term "hex," or "hechs."

Indeed, the practice originally implied by that term, in Pennsylvania, is far better described by the word commonly used among practitioners and patients themselves: to wit, "pow-wow," which is pure American Indian and means "big talk." It was used for a council of war or of state and for those incantations which the Indian medicine-man frequently recited in his endeavors to cure certain minor ailments. This was the sense wherein it early gained currency among the more superstitious of the district's neighboring "Dutch."

And as to the aims of their necromancy, what is revealed by a further study of those secret "hex" text-books in the Henry Meyer collection? They prescribe the spells for the terrible witches and wizards of the genuine "Dutch." What is it that these books declare those spells can do?

They say their incantations can:

Restore an errant lover; cause rain and stop it; expel insects; make ailing fruit trees bear, hens lay, cattle reproduce; banish birthmarks, stiffness of the joints, "stomach-trouble," heartburn and wipe out warts.

In more ambitious moments, the pow-wow doctor might seek to avert war. Col. Henry W. Shoemaker, whom we have previously had occasion to quote as an authority upon Pennsylvania folklore, says of the female practitioner that she was most often an estimable old lady and that her assistance was chiefly rendered when "the milk would not churn butter, when the cows gave bloody milk, or horses acted as if they had been ridden all night by 'The Black Man.' On rare occasions, she used her spells to remove evil spirits, but never to assist them." This is expert testimony.

The Pennsylvania pioneer's life was no easier than that of his fellows in other colonies. "People got worn out grubbing stumps, picking stones or bringing 20 or more children into the world. When they 'went down' to utter despondency, there was no swanky sanitarium; it was a case of 'making a die of it' or crawling back to work. Then a gentle old lady with a 'granny's cap,' or a dark-eyed old gentleman with a black beard to his feet, had the power to drive away the bluedevils by a system secret to its initiates."

The incantations are a strange salad. They contain a little "Dutch," more French, some Greek and Spanish, and all are seasoned with heavy sprinklings of American Indian phrases. Of course, it was dangerous then; of course it is dangerous today; of course it was, and is, therefore, as contrary to the rules of common-sense as it was and is to the commands of the churches. But there is no evidence whatever that it has, in any instance, been consciously employed to incite to crime.

Nobody, Col. Shoemaker's researches reveal, ever heard of a "hex-murder," or a pow-wow murder, in Pennsylvania throughout colonial times or during all the subsequent years—until the "Dutch" districts were invaded by settlers or another sort. The Colonel thinks the old pow-wowers have passed away entirely; we have heard of a few aged figures hanging on into the present day. But we are as sure as he is that these, when they have any patients, would be frightened out of their wits if asked to do anything worse than cheer the melancholy cow or talk away the mole that is disfiguring little Sally's otherwise dainty chin.

The trouble is that newcomers and interlopers are using the name, the fame and the methods of white magic for black. In York, Reading and Pottsville, where the most recent "hex" activities have been revealed, says Col. Shoemaker, scrutiny of the actors shows that they are all invaders from afar.

Social-Mindedness.

MR. ROOSEVELT'S visit to highly exclusive Groton the other day to see his son graduate has provoked considerable discussion on the subject of aristocracy and social-mindedness. In some quarters Mr. Roosevelt, with his aristocratic background, is looked upon as somewhat of a phenomenon in social-mindedness while others cite him as evidence of the increasing social-mindedness on the part of those reared in an exclusive atmosphere, particularly those of this group who go in for public service.

BARGERON.

David Lawrence, writing in the New York Sun, takes this latter view. He gives Gifford Pinchot as another example, and sets out to make the point that social-mindedness is no longer the attribute of any particular class.

The whole discussion has caused me to wonder just what social-mindedness is.

Unquestionably, both Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Pinchot are champions of the masses. That is to say, they voice their grievances, talk to the people, and emphasize their needs and desires. But frankly, my belief, insofar as Mr. Pinchot is concerned, and I may be mistaken about this, is that the workers in Pennsylvania advanced more under Joe Grundy's patronage than they ever did under Mr. Pinchot. Not that Joe was ever looked upon as their champion. I have never heard of his riding through the workers' ranks on a white horse and wearing a sombrero. As a matter of fact, all we have ever heard here in Washington about Joe was that he was pretty hard-boiled. That was the picture the Democrats painted of him. They made an issue of the "Grundy" tariff bill, with which he had very little to do, and then when they came in did nothing to repeal or modify that bill, except a few days ago they voted to give Mr. Roosevelt authority to do something about it.

It is a fact that most of the social legislation enacted in Pennsylvania in recent years, such as workmen's compensation and the like, was enacted under the Grundy reign, not under Mr. Pinchot. The latter's followers would contend that Mr. Pinchot has never been permitted to do the things he would like to do. I would say, then, that his influence is subject to question. And one reason he has not been more of an influence may very well be the tactics he pursues.

• • • •

About the most social-minded thing that could be done in this country today would be to return the 10,000,000 unemployed to work. That, in my opinion, can not be done by frightening people who have money to invest, by continued talk about revolutions, about this being a new deal, about all the bankers and business men of the past and the leaders having been crooks, and legislative carryings-on which keep them in turmoil.

The masses undoubtedly look upon this attitude as social-mindedness. After what they have been through, this sort of stuff has a welcome ring to them. But in the final analysis I believe they will be more inclined to judge the social-mindedness of our leaders by their ability to create jobs.

There will come a time when the people won't be able to eat or to exist on the pretty words of the Young Liberals, or be able to take them anywhere and get bread in return. These literary jewels have a high commercial value now because we have been put in a pretty mean mood. I am satisfied there are many of us who would rather at this time hear a railing against the "rich" and the poetical mouthings of Prof. Tugwell about the more abundant life than have a job, particularly when for the time being the Government is willing and prepared to take care of us.

But we are apt to run into the time when we will wonder just what sort of social-mindedness this is.

If we are to take words as social-mindedness we must accept Charley Mitchell's assertion that he was pretty social-minded himself. Explaining his high salary and the high salaries of other officials of the National City Bank he said they were to inspire the younger employes, to give them something to shoot at. A friend of youth—that's how social-minded he was.

Lightning Strikes Barn; Loss, $2,000

Biddle Property, Near Myersville, Is Hit.

Frederick, Md., June 7 (Spl.).—A barn on the farm of Walter Biddle, near Myersville, struck by lightning during a severe electrical storm yesterday afternoon, was destroyed, as were its contents of hay, feed and farming implements. Firemen from Middletown responded but were unable to save the structure. The loss is estimated at $2,000.

Richard H. Conrad, funeral director, was stunned when lightning struck on North Market street and deflected into his office. He was hurled about eight feet. The office equipment was scattered about the floor.

Lightning struck a tree in New Market and in other sections of the county trees were splintered and branches shattered. The storm was heavy at Emmitsburg, Thurmont, Middletown, Libertytown, Walkersville and Buckeystown. Two storms, one immediately following the other, occurred in some localities. The rain will be of great benefit to crops and vegetation.

Caution or Boldness: France Must Choose

German Rearmament and Aggressive Spirit Tightens Crisis for Neighbor Across the Rhine; Britain Involved as Reich Presses Preparations.

IX—HOW WILL FRANCE CHOOSE?

By Hamilton Fish Armstrong, Editor of "Foreign Affairs."

Germany rearming; England as isolationist as the narrow Channel permits; Poland playing a poker hand; the Little Entente restless; Italy opportunistic. With these phenomena abroad, and at home a moral crisis reaching to the heart of her body politic, what will France decide to do? Shall she be cautious or bold, conciliatory or combative, active or passive, hopeful or desperate?

Even at this late date she can try to resuscitate the League, Locarno and the disarmament conference. Open-eyed, she can accept what Ramsay MacDonald once called "the risks of peace." This program demands coolness, patience and exceptional unity of national purpose. It excludes demagoguery, in a time when demagogues are powerful in several countries. It requires a certain amount of confidence in the sincerity of Hitler's peaceful professions and in his ability to control his party and the German people. It means the acceptance of German rearmament up to an agreed point. It means recession from the position France adopted in her note of April 17, and the reduction of French "offensive" armament within a certain period to a level to be fixed at the same time that the upper limit of German armaments is set. It means the establishment of a control commission to watch over the execution of this treaty, with the participation of the most powerful nations, the United States included. This is the substance of the proposals which were evolved in the disarmament conference in the spring of 1933, and which Hitler's menaces led France to reject.

To make possible French acceptance of such a program, and to stabilize the situation on the continent, England would have to give guarantees for the enforcement of the treaty which fixed the degree of German rearmament — she, too, would have to accept the "risks of peace," more categorically than Mr. MacDonald has yet been willing to do. Simultaneously there would have to be a solemn reiteration of the Locarno agreements by England and by Germany. Obviously, too, there would have to be an "Eastern Locarno," or at least a strengthening of the German-Poland treaty by extending it to cover territorial as well as other controversies and the signature of a similar treaty between Germany and Czechoslovakia. A slackening of tension in every country as a result of a world-wide economic recovery might just conceivably make possible such a program of mutual renunciation and mutual trust.

France Has Choice of Three Courses of Action.

Otherwise, France seems logically to have a limited number of courses open to her:

1. She can call Germany formally to account and accuse her of breaking the engagements taken in the Versailles Treaty. If the German government defaults on the Young Plan bonds, she might seek to re-establish the juridical situation existing before the Lausanne reparations agreement, and then seize a security that would either force compliance with the old reparations schedule or provide compensation for default.

She can take gages against further German rearmament. Under this program she might try to create the juridical basis for retaining the Saar; she might perhaps take back the Rhine bridgeheads and even the whole Rhineland; she would hold on to every present advantage like grim death, step up her armaments, lengthen the term of military service, consolidate her alliances, sacrifice everything to the task of keeping forty-two million Frenchmen one degree more powerful than sixty-five million Germans.

2. She can stand quite definitely aside, washing her hands of the troubles of her allies in Eastern Europe, occupying herself with her own internal tasks of constitutional reform and financial reconstruction, turning her surplus energies to exploiting her North African domain. She might even make an alliance with Germany, or at least agree with her definitely regarding each country's future role. Such an agreement would be, in effect, a division of Europe. The Franco-German iron and steel industry would prosper, and the two countries would allocate between themselves the world markets for potash. France would continue as the intellectual and artistic capital of western Europe and develop her trade in directions in which her talents and resources especially fit her to excel. To Germany would fall the East.

3. This is the third course. She can adopt the second procedure for a time, out of a mixture of indecision, internal dissension, sincere pacifism and unwillingness to assume responsibility for a fresh international crisis and possibly bloodshed; and then, suddenly rousing her spirit, perhaps under some authoritarian regime, throw herself against a Germany which meanwhile has thoroughly rearmed and possibly added to her own superior manpower the manpower of Austria.

The first of these courses does not necessarily mean general war, but its results both in Germany and France would be unimaginably dangerous. Occupation is costly and disintegrating. The whole German race can not be exterminated. The cleft already noticeable in France between class and class, between Paris and the country, would be accentuated. A military dictatorship might have to be set up, and there inevitably would be attempts to overthrow it. In Germany there would almost certainly be social chaos, leading to the establishment of a special Nazi type of Bolshevism.

Course number two does not necessarily mean general war; France would adopt it, consciously or unconsciously, to avoid trouble. Almost surely, however, the relentless execution of the Nazi program would lead to wars in eastern Europe. Is it conceivable that the Poles, after what we know of their history, would sink again under a foreign heel without a struggle, or that the Czechs could quietly be blotted out, or that the Yugoslav movement, which had enough vitality to break in pieces the ancient Hapsburg monarchy and set up its own national state would wait to see that state broken without offering battle? In any of these possible wars Soviet Russia might decide to participate, for nationalistic or for social revolutionary purposes, with unpredictable consequences.

Course number three is war—perhaps a long war—with most or all of the continent implicated, with distant powers soon involved in disputes over their evanescent neutral "rights," and with the upshot in doubt.

In the disarmament question, France might have done better to accept agreement in the spring of 1933, granting Germany limited rearmament, setting up a supervisory machinery to inspect armaments in all countries, Germany included, and undertaking in return to begin disarmament, but only by stages, i. e., after she had seen evidence of German good faith. She would have risked no more than she now risks. If Germany had continued rearming, and passed the new treaty limits, the world would have understood that even better than it understood the present situation, and France would have had that much more moral support. Of course, full French acceptance of this program in May, 1933, might or might not have brought full German acceptance. There is evidence to show that Germany's withdrawal from the Disarmament Conference on October 4, 1933, took place hurriedly when she saw she was about to be faced with a compromise that would be disconcertingly hard to refuse. She might have scuttled out in May.

Ended Negotiations Which Cloaked German Rearming.

However this may be, France did not accept the British disarmament program in May, 1933, and in April, 1934, after the publication of the new German military budget, she made an end of a negotiation which in the eyes of M. Doumergue's new government of national union had become a farce, a cloak behind which Germany was rearming discreetly but rapidly. In the new cabinet the French general staff for the first time was represented. And M. Barthou, minister for foreign affairs, as premier in 1915, had prepared the three-year service law in reply to increases in the German army.

The military advisers of the new government acknowledged that Germany at the moment could not risk a war with France and probably would be willing never to fight France if France gradually gave way before German ambitions in accordance with the second of the alternative courses outlined above. Failing France's adoption of that course, however, the General Staff stated that since Germany's superior industrial capacity insured her being able to manufacture heavy guns better and more rapidly than France, they could not agree to limit heavy guns in return for a convention which a future British government might or might not interpret in the same way as the French government.

They said it was impossible to promise not to lengthen the period of military service, when the French force immediately available in case of conflict (the so-called "covering force") amounts to less than 300,000 men, while Germany has promptly available over a million men in military formations.

These arguments appealed not merely to M. Tardieu and M. Marin, but also to M. Doumergue and M. Herriot. The cabinet adopted unanimously the note of April 17 rejecting the proposed convention which had grown out of the British memorandum of January 29, 1933, and terminating the "unofficial" negotiations which had been been in progress between the principal powers for several months.

English Opinion Definitely Hostile to Nazi Regime.

English opinion had been definitely hostile to Germany since the advent of Hitler. Very many disliked the anti-liberal policy of the Nazi government, its persecution of political dissenters and Jews; others disliked the overturn of the trades unions; others resented the treatment accorded the churches, Catholic and Protestant; others foresaw the beginnings of a new race in armaments in which England would be bound to participate. The French note of April 17 was nevertheless a shock. We have spoken of the choices which lie ahead of France. England has also a grave choice to make. She wishes to keep out of the mess on the continent. Her public, counting on the Channel, would like to see British Cabinet ministers as "isolationist" as possible.

Can England, even if mistress of the seven seas, afford to let the continent throw itself to the dogs of war? Goering first whispered, now shouts, "no!"

While the British public was reacting with varying degrees of understanding, regret and anger to the French note of April 17, officials were studying the latest information from Germany regarding military preparations already in train. Englishmen had known that the German martial spirit was being restored at a terrific rate and to a terrific extent, that even children were being trained in the technique of trench warfare and bomb throwing, that with his every mouthful of air every Geranm must breathe in an atmosphere of preparation for war.

It was specifically the information that by the end of the year Germany will have 2,300 modern military planes in the air, and plans to have double that number six months later, which constituted Gen. Goering's "no" to the idea that England could remain disinterested.

Future historians may draw a parallel between Gen. Goerings's determination to construct an air fleet which can cross the Channel in a few minutes and lay waste England's principal cities and industrial areas, with the prewar naval program of Admiral von Tirpitz, who after the turn of the century was ready to risk British enmity by pressing forward the construction of a fleet menacing the naval supremacy by which the British Empire lives. If now there is to be a race in air armaments, can Britain refuse to participate?

Mr. Armstrong's tenth and final article, "The French Revival," will appear tomorrow.

Footnotes and Gossip

HENRY FORD, touring the Gettysburg battlefield the other day, didn't have 25 cents to pay for a guide-book. When that sad little news item reached New York, Coward-McCann's publicity man had an inspiration. He mailed Mr. Ford a copy of "Long Remember," free and gratis. Not that MacKinlay Kantor's fine novel is a Baedeker to Seminary Ridge and the Bloody Wheat Field, but it does give as stirring an account of the battle as has appeared in fiction. . . . There is rather more meaning in the news that 52 copies of "Long Remember" have been printed by the Braille Press for the blind. . . . Surely no author has had his feelings hurt by Lewis Gannett, genial book columnist of the New York Herald Tribune. But if any literary breast harbors a grudge, here is its only chance of revenge. For Mr. Gannett has just written a book, "Sweet Land," a travelogue of a month by motor across the country, will be published by Doubleday Doran early in July. With him were his wife and his 14-year-old son, and these have a share in the book also. For the boy drew the jacket, and Mrs. Gannett designed the headings and end-pieces.

The four books this year of the C. L. S. C. (Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle, oldest reading club in the country) are Dr. Charles Reynolds Brown's "They Were Giants" (short biographies of great Americans), Harry A. Overstreet's "A Guide to Civilized Loafing," Suzanne La Follette's "Art in America," and Elizabeth Drew's "Discovering Poetry." These books, together with a questionnaire, cost $5.

Assisting in the choice were William Lyon Phelps, Henry Seidel Canby, Carl Van Doren, Frederick Melcher and Clifton Fadiman.

Word comes that N. stands for Nina, and N. Warner Hooke, author of "Striplings" (Dutton) is a young woman of 27. Among her ancestors (which is a matter authors always include in their autobiographical notes) was a governor of an early penal colony in Tasmania, an astronomer-royal, and a survivor of the Black Hole of Calcutta, who succeeded Clive as governor of Bengal. Miss Hooke was educated at Oxford, did commercial art for a while, and wrote a few poems before sitting down to this first novel. . . . Charlie Chaplin has three books on his bedside table—Shakespeare, a dictionary and Max Miller. That last is civic pride, for southern California puts the author of "I Cover the Waterfront" up beside the Bard of Avon.

My ignorance the other day about "a place called Yaddo—wherever that may be," has been amended by a prompt and gracious correspondent, who writes:

"Yaddo has a romantic history. It is one of the show places of Saratoga, N. Y., and adjoins the famous race track. It was the country estate of Spencer Trask, investment banker. The odd name was invented by one of the Trask children, who, in writing a poem on the homestead, was dismayed to find that there was no word in the dictionary which rhymed with "shadow." With the resourcefulness of childhood, she up and invented one.

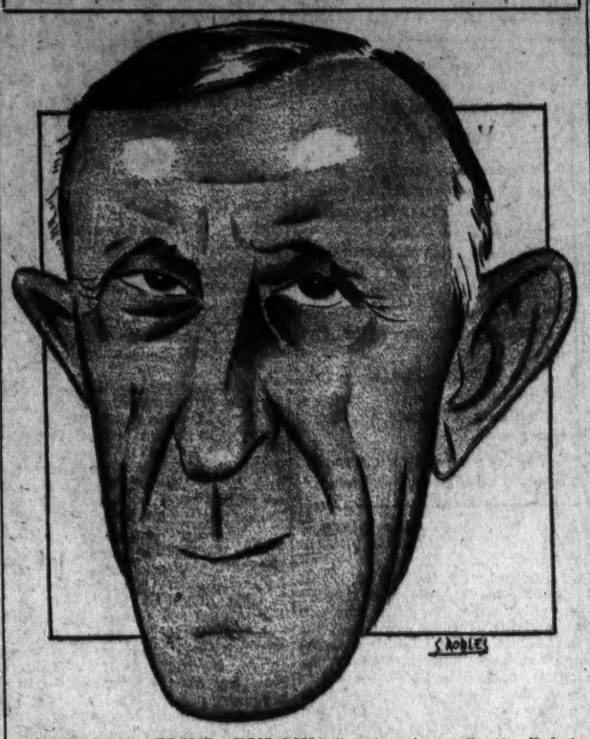
"Mrs. Trask was a shut-in—musical, literary and social. During the lifetime of the owners the place was a rendezvous of artists, writers and musicians. The Trask children died in early childhood. Mr. and Mrs. Trask had a sentimental attachment for their home, naturally, and conceived the idea of having it preserved intact. A gray stone mansion of 30 rooms or so, filled with choice antiques, it was bequeathed to the Yaddo Incorporation as a vacation home for creative artists of all kinds—dancers, painters, sculptors, composers and writers—including literary critics.

"Residence is by invitation. The food is something to write home about—if your waistline is not a matter of concern. There are a few outdoor studios to take care of the overflow from the mansion in work hours. The number of guests, though, is kept to house-party size—say about 15. Life there is a delicious mixture of informality and the grand manner, unique and very beautiful.

"If you happen to visit the Saratoga races, drop in for tea, which is served punctiliously every afternoon in the grand entrance hall. This is about 80 feet long, with a marble Roman what-do-you-call-it and playing fountain at one end, and an enormous porteullis window opening on the terrace at the other. In between are seasoned bits of wood, such as Italian Renaissance throne chairs, Chinese tables and Queen Wilhelmina's childhood sleigh to provide topics of conversation if you're sick of books."

Now that the matter is brought up, I'm sure I could be very ill indeed if a stay at Yaddo were to be the reward.

The National Gallery



WILLIAM JOHN BULOW, Senator from South Dakota. Though actually a New Dealer, his insurgent tactics often plant his feet on ground where stolid Brain Trusters would hesitate to stomp. While Governor of South Dakota, two terms, 1927-1931, he ruffled the fur of Democrats who read in a newspaper interview that his State was ready to indorse President Coolidge for reelection. Afterward he proclaimed that he had been hoodwinked by a "city slicker" reporter who had taken advantage of his ebullience. Mayor of Beresford, S. Dak., 1912-1913, where he began his practice. Senate term, 1931-1937. A wide-brimmed sombrero shades his placid face and modest but typically Western exterior. Wears store clothes and bides his time both in speech and political forays.

Such a large proportion of those who have been pictured by Mr. Robles have asked for the originals that The Washington Post is saving all these drawings to honor the requests of any future members of "The National Gallery."

Why Plow Up Cotton When Millions Need Sheets?

By Robert Quillen

People who see no fault in machinery overlook the truism that every virtue becomes a vice when carried to extremes.

Machines that rescued man from drudgery and enabled him to produce necessities in greater abundance were unmixed blessings.

The reaper, the steam engine, the linotype, the sewing machine and the automobile remade the world and multiplied its wealth beyond reckoning. Where they ended one man's job, they made new jobs for hundreds. And machines like these equipped mankind, for the first time in history, to produce abundance for everybody.

But machine production, given free rein, must inevitably reach the saturation point.

If every individual in America had money to buy everything he desired, it would still be possible to build enough machines to manufacture more than everybody could use. Man's ability to consume is limited, but machinery's ability to produce is not.

The present stalemate, however, was not caused by man's inability to consume, but by his inability to purchase.

When a new machine does the work of ten men without creating new demands to provide new jobs, it decreases by ten the number who can buy the machine's product. Thus, the more efficient machinery becomes, the more certainly it defeats its purposes.

Eventually the machines stand idle because the few who own and operate them can not consume their product, and the many, being jobless and without income, can not buy it.

What can be done about it? Shall we scrap the machines and return to the hand labor of the ancients? That would be stupid. It is unintelligent and unmoral to destroy anything useful while many suffer for want of it.

There is, then, but one alternative. By some means—call it what you will—the machines must support the men they displaced.

That is being done now, but in the wrong way. We are doing in the name of charity the thing we should do in the name of reason. The machines are taxed to provide a camouflaged dole for the jobless, and both the machine owners and the jobless feel aggrieved.

Men will solve the problem, of course, but not by plowing up cotton while millions need more sheets.

Nest of Robins Riding the Rods In West Virginia

Buckhannon, W. Va., June 7 (Spl.).—People along the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad from this city to Tygarts Junction are giving as much interest and care to a traveling family of robins as they would to human beings.

There are the parents and three little robins in the family, and all are living happily in a nest built on rods beneath the baggage coach of the "Blue Goose," gasoline-driven train operating daily between the two points, a distance of 17 miles. The parent birds started building their nest when the train was stalled here, but its subsequent daily movement over the route did not bother them. The eggs were duly laid and hatched, and the baby robins thrived.

Capt. W. F. Miles, veteran conductor; P. A. Farnsworth, engineer; E. L. Cutlip, brakeman, and Charles Hoffman, yard car shifter, are proud of their unusual wards and see that they are not molested.

Utility President Honored at Dinner

Frederick, Md., June 7 (Spl.).—S. Paul Smith, a native of Frederick County, who rose from a stenographer's position to president of the Potomac Edison Co., was given a dinner at the Francis Scott Key Hotel last night in recognition of 25 years of service with the company.

About 75 persons, including Judge Voorhis, vice president and general counsel of the American Water Works and Electric Co., New York; W. S. Findlay, president of the West Penn Electric Co., Pittsburgh; Joseph D. Baker, Frederick's "first citizen" and himself an honored guest at a testimonial dinner recently; Gray Williams, counsel for the Northern Virginia Power Co., Winchester, Va.; former Judge Walsh, State Insurance Commissioner; State Senator Emory L. Coblentz; Leo Wienberg, local attorney for the company; Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Smith, parents, and Robert L. Smith, brother of Mr. Smith, were present.

$3,000 More Given To U. Va. Research

Charlottesville, Va., June 7 (Spl.).—The physiology department of the University of Virginia Medical School has received an additional grant of $3,000 from the National Research Council to continue research activities into the relations of adrenal glands and sex.

This is the fourth grant Dr. Sidney W. Britton, professor of physiology, and his staff have received from the National body, and will enable them to carry on the study of adrenal extract started several years ago. This extract of the harmone secreted by the cortex of of the adrenal gland is becoming increasingly important in clinical medicine, and is said to be entirely different from adrenalin, a secretion of the inner part of the gland affecting circulation and muscular action. Evidence is strong that it plays a major role in determining normal sex differences and is known to have other influences on the human body.

The staff assisting Dr. Britton in carrying on this work includes Dr. Edward L. Cory, assistant professor of physiology, and Herbert Silvette and Oscar G. Fitzhugh, research students in medicine.

Egins to Address Virginia V. F. W.

Roanoke, Va., June 7 (Spl.).—Addresses by John Egins, of Washington, National rehabilitation officer; Millard D. Rice, of Cincinnati, Ohio, past National commander, and Col. E. W. Jordan, of Richmond, regional manager of the Veterans' Administration, are scheduled features of the encampment of the Virginia Department, Veterans of Foreign Wars, here Friday and Saturday.

The National and State officers will discuss new veterans' legislation. Col. Jordan is to speak at the convention banquet at 7 p. m. Friday. Other visitors expected include Capt. P. N. Feltham, supervisor in the South of construction for the Veterans' Administration, and Thomas G. Dood, of the administration's engineering staff.

Falls Church Chapter is expected to send the largest delegation to the encampment. J. L. Lloyd, commander of Magic City Chapter, No. 14, here, is chairman of the convention committee.

Honorary Degrees for 1934.

The University of Public Opinion takes pleasure in awarding the following honorary degrees to Americans who have distinguished themselves by unusual performance and achievements during the past year:

Glinnock, Chidsey S. (lawyer extraordinary, student of ethics and a good judge of cigars)—During a singularly unique career as a member of the bar you scorned the fat retainers of public enemies, and at no time devoted your talents and your intellect to helping racketeers make a monkey of justice and pursue their nefarious practices with minimum interference. Unusual distinction thus becomes yours, and the faculty is proud to confer upon you the degree of Counselor Untarnished, and throw in six bottles of beer.

• • • •

Pemmicle, Otis R. (storekeeper, radio fan and father)—A year ago last March you pasted a Blue Eagle in the window of your store. Before doing so you carefully ascertained the responsibilities imposed by such an insignia, and you have scrupulously lived up to the obligations involved from that time on, under no circumstances using it dishonestly or hypocritically.

This entitles you to a $50,000 gold cup, the Nobel Prize and a serenade by the Marine Band, but the best the faculty can do is to give you the degree of Non-Chiseler with palms and wish you lots of luck.

• • • •

Tillifer, Ajax Z. (politician, squash player and one-fingered piano player)—Appointed as director of a CWA project in a period of National distress, you at no time operated under the slogan "Never give the U. S. Treasury a break!" You tried to give Uncle Sam a day's work for a day's pay, did not connive at making a six-week job good for five months, scorned to put your wife, five children and seven cousins on the pay roll and gave preference to the desperately needy rather than to political heelers in all jobs.

Help yourself to any degree in the faculty's possession and stay for lunch.

• • • •

Phootlebull, Felix D. (plain citizen, rummy player and cribbage champion)—Ever since 1929 you have been asked thousands of times, "What do you think is the solution to economic recovery?" And in all cases you have refused to answer on the ground that the problem was too big for you.

Quick! Grab a bunch of our best degrees and pardon our cheering.

No Chance.

The New York State Alcohol Control Board has refused to let the theaters have bars. This kills all prospect of next year's Pulitzer Prize being won by a distiller.

Add similes: As incongruous as a children's matinee at a Mae West picture.

Europe Speaks.

We ain't gonna pay no more—
We ain't gonna pay no more!
We may owe you the dough
But we want you to know
We ain't gonna pay no more!

We ain't gonna pay no more—
Which we should have disclosed before;
We appreciate all
That you did at our call,
But we ain't gonna pay no more!

We ain't gonna pay no more
And trust you will not get sore;
You were soft to our touch
And we borrowed too much
But we ain't gonna pay no more!

Get the Idea?

Well, as Ima Dodo observes, a suspension of war debts is better than no payment at all.

Geography.

Finland: A small country entirely surrounded by defaulters; its chief characteristic is honesty; its natural resources include high character and a deep sense of national honor; its soil is unsuitable to cupidity and cunning, and it does not import them; its people are unique in Europe in that they regard a contract as inviolate and believe in carrying out a contract.

Daily Talk About Books and Authors

London to Paris by Air.

Those who are going to be in Europe this summer will enjoy the air voyage between London and Paris. The big ship leaves each city at noon, and its running time is two hours and a half, so that one is at one's destination at half-pa . two. The difference between the trim neatness of England's towns and villages and the wide expanse of France, with the channel between, is something one never forgets.

When we made this journey, 14 passengers, with several tons of baggage, the weather was so bad—rain, fog, wind—that we did not start from London until half-past two, and we were three hours and 40 minutes in transit, as we had to go clear outside the regular path, and we flew slowly and very low, so it seemed to me we moved like a freight train, and I wondered why we did not fall. But our closeness to the land and to the sea made individual houses, sheep, &c., extremely clear, and the Channel was exactly as the Tennysonia phrase described it—"the wrinkled sea." I advise those who take this air journey this summer to preserve the following poem by Lord Gorell (born 1884, graduate of Oxford). It is the best description in verse that I have seen:

London to Paris by Air.

The droning roar is quickened,
And we lift
On steady wing, like upward sweep of air,
Into the fleece-strewn heaven.
The great plane
Draws to herself the leagues: onward we bear
In one resistless eddy towards the south,
Over the English fields, trim-hedged and square,
And countless, winding lanes, a vast expanse
Of flattened green: huge shapes of men
Stripped of their cherished privacy we note,
And crawling multitudes within a town—
On all we rangers of the wind look down.

The coast-line swings to us: beneath our feet
The gray-green carpet of the sliding sea
Stretches afar, on it small, busy ships
Whose comet-tails in foamy whiteness flee:
We lift, and snowy cloudlets roam below,
Frail, wistful spirits of pure charity
Blessing the waters: like green marble veined,
The waves roll in upon the yellowing sand,
Then break to myriad, filmy curves of lace
When they eternally caress the land:
Now low lies France—the kingdom of the breeze
Parts not the nations like the severing seas.

Down the wide river, jauntily outspread,
A fishing fleet comes seaward, to our eyes
Mere walnut shells with autumn leaves for sails:
And now a fellow pilgrim of the skies,
Like a big insect droning past our flank,
Cruises to England home: before us lies
The rolling plain, with its great, hedgeless strips
Of close-tilted fields, red roofs, and pointed trees,
The feathered arrows of the long French roads,
And all the stretch of quiet harmonies:
Then heaven shows, and downward to earth's breast,
Like homing bird, we wheel and sink to rest.

Cool Mountains Beckon Autos To Shenandoah Valley Tour

Choice of Routes Can Be Made, but All Are Charming.

This is the second in a series of articles describing convenient and interesting places to visit during the summer week-ends. The Shenandoah Valley and the Virginia mountains have long been popular with Washington tourists. Their proximity, the complete change of environment, and the cool breezes that are always there make them especially inviting.

This series of articles is prepared in conjunction with the Keystone Automobile Club, which has verified the condition of the roads, as well as all other material contained in the story.

Off for a day in the mountains! Along the smooth, historic highways of the Old Dominion. Away from the stifling warmth of the lowlands to the hills and valleys of the Shenandoah country. Over the week-end the beaches and salt water will be forgotten, and sunburn and sore muscles will be given a chance to heal in the forests and glades where once, not so long ago, even a crow had to carry his own fare with him if he expected to get out alive.

The Shenandoah Valley can not be seen in a day. One could spend weeks, and even longer, profitably rummaging around its many interests, and go away feeling that he had not seen the half of it. But for those who have been cooped up in narrow rooms all week, and who have managed to survive the heat of the city, even a day's respite in the foothills is more than inviting. If it is possible to spare an extra day, by all means take the longer route from Winchester to New Market, perhaps on down to Harrisonburg, and see the Shenandoah Valley as it deserves to be seen.

Even the shorter route will require an early start if it is to be made in one day, and not too hurriedly. There is a choice of roads out to Fairfax, either through Alexandria over highway 50, or over Key Bridge and out through Clarendon and Falls Church. The latter is the shorter. Falls Church is a quaint old town. Here Washington attended church and was elected to serve as vestryman in 1763.

Take U. S. 50 Going.

Continue on through Fairfax, and about 2 miles west of town, highways 50 and 211 branch. Just to be different, let's take highway 50. Coming back we will travel highway 211. Thus we will come up the valley instead of going down it, not that it makes any particular difference, however.

Rolling along at a smart clip over highway 50, and it is a splendid and beautiful drive, we soon approach the town of Aldie. At Aldie a road branches off to the right, and leads past the home of President Monroe, on to Leesburg and the Potomac River. But we will scarcely have time to make that trip, because we have barely started.

Aldie is particularly interesting because it sits along the shore line of the ancient American continent—the shore line of a great sea which, millions of years ago, stretched from the Gulf of St. Lawrence on the Atlantic to the country of Nicaragua on the Pacific. That was before the Blue Ridge or any of the land to the west had emerged above the waves of the ocean. If those conditions obtained today, Aldie would be a Pacific seaport!

Fine Estates Numerous.

After we leave Aldie, the country becomes increasingly more rugged. We are entering the foothills of the Blue Ridge. Here are splendid estates, where good living is the rule, and here Virginia competes with Kentucky in the raising of fine horses—and beats her at her own game. Onward highway 50 continues, through Paris, demure in its rugged setting, through Millwood and Boyce to Winchester, in the lower reaches of the great valley.

Winchester is small in size, but great in history and tradition—and climate. Here is old Fort Loudoun, built by George Washington as Virginia's outpost against the French and Indians. Here Gen. Daniel Morgan and Lord Fairfax lie buried, and Sheridan's headquarters are within the limits of the city. In the Revolutionary War Hessian prisoners were housed here, and in the War Between the States the city changed hands 72 times during the course of the struggle. Today Winchester is the apple capital of Eastern America, and a resort town than which there is none better to spend a pleasant vacation.

At Winchester the fatal decision must be made: Whether it were better to wire the office that you have suddenly come down with the toothache and can't be at work tomorrow, and thus get to tour the valley from Winchester as far as New Market or Harrisonburg; or to take the shorter route to Front Royal and get back in plenty of time, still having an excellent drive home through the cool and pleasant Virginia mountains.

In Heart of Valley Now.

The longer route leads through the very heart of the valley, and great hills loom up on either side. The trail follows Highway 11, from Winchester through Stephens City, through Strasburg, Woodstock, Edinburg, into New Market. All along the way there old forts, old battle grounds. At New Market are world renowned caves, some of which have never been completely explored, and there are equally famous caves at Luray on the way home via Highway 211.

The shorter route from Winchester through Front Royal to Highway 211 is a fascinating drive. It runs through heavily wooded and mountainous sections, where history was made during both the Revolutionary and the Civil Wars. The beauty of the countryside and the quiet make this way a joy to travel.

Thirty-six miles south of Winchester we come to the junction with Highway 211, which we follow all the way back to Fairfax. Though the country is quite rugged near the junction, we have left the mountains well behind by the time we reach Warrenton, and 29 miles from Warrenton is Fairfax.

Country Is Historic.

It would be difficult to find a more historic stretch of country than that between the cities. Here the bloody battles of Manassas were fought, here Gen. McClellan, four miles east of Warrenton, bade farewell to his Army of the Potomac. Two miles east of Warrenton is the old Dumfries-Winchester highway, over which William Fairfax accompanied George Washington, when the latter was a lad of 16, on his first visit to Lord Fairfax at Greenway Court. It was on this occasion that Washington assisted in surveying the Fairfax grant.

From Fairfax, getting back into Washington is a simple matter. The routes through Alexandria or Falls Church are equally good. The one through Falls Church is somewhat shorter, and likely to be less crowded.

A quick trip through the Shenandoah Valley and the mountains merely whets the appetite for them. The very magnitude of the things to see and to do demands a leisurely visit. While even a little sip is pleasant, a good strong leisurely draft is the final answer.

Thumb-nail sketch short tour through part of Virginia's Shenandoah Valley and foothills:

Washington to Winchester, 73 miles.

Winchester, through Front Royal to Highway 211, 36 miles.

Junction, Highway 211, back to Washington, 68 miles.

Alternate cross-country route, Winchester to New Market, through Luray to Junction Highway 37, 80 miles.

Total distance, short tour, 177 miles.

Total distance, longer route, 257 miles.

Condition of roads excellent either way.

Total driving time, short route, 7 hours; long route, 9 hours.

Norfolk Base Will Receive 36-Ship Fleet

Scheduled to Arrive in Hampton Roads From June 19 to July 11.

Norfolk, Va., June 7 (Spl.).—Thirty-six warships, cruisers, airplane-carriers, destroyers and supply ships and privately owned tankers, for the time being under charter to the Navy, will arrive in Hampton Roads between June 19 and July 11, it was announced today at the Norfolk naval operating base.

The major part of this fleet, including cruisers and destroyers, is scheduled to arrive June 20. Among them will be the cruiser Houston, on which President Roosevelt will make a trip to Hawaii this summer, and the Indianapolis, from the decks of which he reviewed the United States fleet in New York May 31.

Besides the Houston and Indianapolis, other ships due June 20 include the cruisers Chester, Chicago, Louisville, Northampton, Pensacola, Raleigh and Salt Lake City, and the destroyers Lawrence, Treble, Schenck, Tarbell, Sands, Upshur, Whitney, Dupont, Dickerson, Fox, Greer, Hopkins, Herbert, Huldert, Humphreys and Leary, and the supply ship Arctic. On June 24 the airplane carriers Lexington, Saratoga and Langley are scheduled to arrive.

The supply ship Bridge, now delivering supplies to the fleet off New York, will return here July 11 to load for a return trip to the same place. The tankers Hugoton and Ardmore, chartered by the Navy to transport oil to Norfolk for the fleet, are due July 2 and 11, respectively. The Malay, another private tanker, already has left the West Coast with oil for the fleet, and will dock either at the naval base or Yorktown.

The Houston, it was said, probably will be "dressed up" while in these waters, in preparation for the Presidential cruise to Hawaii. She is flagship of the third cruiser division, and has been on duty in the Asiatic for two years.

President Roosevelt will occupy the admiral's quarters, which consist of a bedroom, a living room 20 feet square, and a pantry. She is a 9,000-ton cruiser and while not as up to date as the Indianapolis and other new 10,000-ton fighters, is amply equipped, it is said, to serve as the floating White House.

Dean of Hopkins Would Suppress Joke Publication

Baltimore, June 7 (Spl.).—Some people may think the Black and Blue Jay, humorous publication of the Johns Hopkins University undergraduates, is funny, but Dean Edward W. Berry thinks otherwise.

He announced today that in his opinion is is "no good," and is planning to suppress it forever.

Only an uprising by the student body in defense of the magazine will convince him that there is anything worth while about it, he said.

"I'll wait and hear what the other side has to say," the dean stated. "I don't see any sense in letting it continue, however."

The magazine was founded about ten years ago, modeled after the Harvard Lampoon and other similar collegiate publications. Several years ago some of the jokes aroused postoffice authorities, and for a time it was denied use of the mails. It also has been barred from Goucher College, woman's school.

Bristol Backs F. C. Parks.

Bristol, Va., June 7 (Spl.).—Bristol's twelve delegates to the Ninth Virginia congressional district nominating convention here June 30 have been instructed to vote for Fred C. Parks, of Abingdon, as the party's nominee for Congress as long as his name is before the convention.

Federal Court Refuses To Hear City Tax Case

Richmond, June 7 (AP).—Federal courts do not have jurisdiction in cases involving protests against local mercantile taxes, Federal Judge Luther B. Way ruled today as he directed the clerk of U. S. District Court to enter a dismissal order in a chain-store case here.

The action was that of the Sanitary Grocery Co., which sought relief from what it considers excessive taxation by the City of Fredericksburg. Judge Way directed the corporation to seek relief through State courts rather than the Federal tribunal.

Radio Waves and Ripples

THE principal scenes and actors in a drama that began with an assassin's shot at Sarajevo 20 years ago, a drama the last act of which has yet to be played, has been crammed into the space of one broadcasting hour and, appropriately titled "Twenty Crowded Years," is ready for airing by Columbia on the twentieth anniversary of the slaying of Archduke Ferdinand June 28.

France . . . Flanders . . . Petrograd . . . Versailles . . . Washington . . . Lindbergh . . . Capone . . . Mussolini . . . Hitler . . . Al Smith . . . the New Dealers . . . some of the scenes and some of the players.

Charles Tazewell, of the C. B. S. continuity department, has written the piece after several months of preparatory research. Courtenay Savage, C. B. S. continuity and drama director, is supervising production. A capable company of players is promised, and Freddie Rich's orchestra will play the interludes.

Unless you aren't interested in the current phases of labor's war on capital, unless the prospect of 100,000 striking steel workers fails to excite you, Gen. Johnson's speech to the convention of International Ladies Garment Workers in Chicago is about the most airworthy thing on your program tonight.

National is carrying it on its blue network (WMAL) from 9:15 to 10.

Columbia offers Senator Pat Harrison's "America's New Tariff Policy," an interpretative discussion of the reciprocal tariff bill, from 9:30 to 9:45 p. m.

IN CASE you were thinking of learning to play the violin this summer:

"The violin is a cruelly exacting task master. Don't study its intricacies unless you passionately long to master it.

"I believe that a study of music is vitally important to the enrichment of everyone's life. I hope that eventually free musical instruction will be available to everyone. It must not be limited to those with professional ambitions. But singing and study of the piano, for example, will be more helpful to the average person than the same length of time devoted to the violin.

"In the first place the position required for holding the violin is an unnatural one. It takes a devoted application over a long period of time before the player can reap rewards. To me mastery of the violin is the most inspiring ambition I can imagine, but such an ambition requires tremendous devotion and real talent if it is to be worth the pains."—Albert Spalding.

We are sorry we missed WMAL's Calvert Street Bridge moving yesterday, for in the time we lost listening to the panegyrics of those who did, we might have walked right out Eighteenth street and witnessed the glacier-like crawling of 12,000 tons of steel and wood.

It appears that the broadcast boys—Bob Youse and Ted Kimball—went about their business just as though they expected the bridge to walk right out into the Potomac. As a matter of fact, during the 15 minutes they had the air, the skid was about 1.556 inches, not particularly inspirational, unless you're a radio announcer.

Whatever worrying N. B. C. may have indulged itself in about what to do with Joe Penner's clamoring public when he and a whole troupe of entertainers come to town for a week's engagement at the Fox and a WRC broadcast June 24, was misplaced, it now appears, for the duck man's sponsors have taken charge of everything.

The show will go on from the National Press Building Auditorium. Tickets will be distributed by the sponsors.

FRANCESCA LENNI is transplanting talent (and eyelashes) from the Broadway boards to Columbia airwaves to work with the Guild.

Getting personal . . .

On the theory, probably, that it is a good idea to have a banjo player where you can put your finger on him when you need him, the Navy has called in Eddie Peabody for a Reserve commission . . . "Is this in addition to the Federal Radio Commission?" the singing lady, who probably was a blonde, is supposed to have asked Will Osburne when she learned that the theatrical agent had deducted the usual 10 per cent . . . Eddie Cantor is collaborating with David Freedman . . . "The Great Glorifier," a Ziegfeld biography, to be published this fall . . . Freedman writes most of Cantor's jokes . . . and the walnut-eyed one is being sued by Life for plagiarism . . . William K. Welles, who has been thinking up funny (?) things for Joe Penner to say ever since he made his air debut, has walked out leaving Joe holding the duck . . . Mr. Penner, it is said, has lately developed temperament . . . Hollywood sometimes does that . . . Graham McNamee is credited with installing the first air-conditioning plant in N. B. C. . . . an electric fan blowing across a 100-pound cake of ice resting in a tub in the solitary control room . . . Mme. Schumann-Heink will celebrate her seventy-third birthday a week from today . . . Ed Wynn has been invited to become an honorary member of the class of 1924 at Yale . . . at the reunion celebration the class will dress in fire chief uniforms and Wynn will ride at their head on a white horse.

WASH OUT 15 MILES OF KIDNEY TUBES

Win Back Pep . . . Vigor . . . Vitality

Medical authorities agree that your kidneys contain 15 MILES of tiny tubes or filters which help to purify the blood and keep you healthy. They should pour out thru the bladder 3 pints of fluid a day which contains 4 pounds of waste matter.

If you have trouble with too frequent bladder passages with scanty amount causing burning and discomfort, the 15 MILES of kidney tubes need washing out. This danger signal may be the beginning of nagging backache, leg pains, loss of pep and vitality, getting up nights, lumbago, swollen feet and ankles, rheumatic pains and dizziness.

If kidneys don't empty 3 pints every day and get rid of 4 pounds of waste matter, your body will take up these poisons causing serious trouble. It may knock you out and lay you up for many months. Don't wait. Ask your druggist for DOAN'S PILLS . . . a doctor's prescription . . . which has been used successfully by millions of kidney sufferers for over 40 years. They give quick relief and will help to wash out the 15 MILES of kidney tubes.

But don't take chances with strong drugs or so-called "kidney cures" that claim to fix you up in 15 minutes. Your common sense will tell you that this is impossible. Treatments of this nature may seriously injure and irritate delicate tissues. Insist on DOAN'S PILLS . . . the old reliable relief that contains no "dope" or habit-forming drugs. Be sure you get DOAN'S PILLS at your druggist. © 1934, Foster-Milburn Co.

BLACKIE BEAR

By D. SAM COX

Uncle Joe Gets Another Dog.

That morning while Uncle Joe was lazying around nursing his sore head, Mr. Man came over. He had been wondering what Uncle Joe would do when he saw Howler. You know there are two sides to most every question, and Mr. Man had been looking at only one. He hadn't thought a thing about what Howler was going to do when he saw Uncle Joe. When he did see that side of the question, he could hardly keep from laughing. It seemed like both ends of the joke had fallen on Uncle Joe. It certainly did seem that the bears and dogs and coons and other animals were getting the best of the old fellow all the way around, and Mr. Man felt sorry for him. He had himself suffered so much at the hands of Blackie Bear and his gang that it made him feel mighty friendly to anybody else that had suffered the same way.

Uncle Joe got up from the bench that he was lying on, and asked Mr. Man to come out and look over the lot and see what all the robbers had done to him. It was a sight to see. They certainly had torn up things, and they had taken away enough to have fed Uncle Joe and Aunt Judy for a long time. As Uncle Joe went around, he began to get so mad that it made his head hurt worse and he kept rubbing it. Mr. Man noticed this, and told him to go on back and lie down. But even after he had lain down, he kept talking loud and shaking his fist as he talked about Blackie till Aunt Judy came out and told him to keep quiet if he didn't want to kill himself worrying, and leave her for the bears to eat.

"Mr. Man," said Uncle Joe, "I've just got to have another dog. I know Howler won't ever come back, and I don't want him, anyway. If he would go away once he would go away again, and I couldn't trust him. Hasn't Rover Dog's puppy come home yet?"

"Yes, he came home last night, and he has grown till he is bigger than his daddy. And he is a mighty good watch-dog. Even when he was a little puppy he used to wake up and bark every time there was a bit of noise at night."

"Well," said Uncle Joe, "I'd be mightily obliged to you if you would let me have him for awhile Blackie Bear and his gang are liable to come back here any night, and I just can't sit up to watch for them."

Mr. Man agreed to let Uncle Joe have his dog for a while, and promised to send him over as soon as he got back home.

Mr. Man stayed for a good while with Uncle Joe, and they talked and talked about Blackie Bear's visit, and what they were going to do to catch him. But they were going to have a hard job of it, for they were sure that he had been off and brought a lot more of his gang back with him. No one bear and a coon and possum or two could have done all the things that had been done around Uncle Joe's place. All their talk couldn't help any, for they just didn't know what to do. They were just about to admit that Blackie had more sense than they had, when Aunt Judy came out and decided the question by telling them that he did. But she did hope that Uncle Joe had enough sense left to keep quiet and try to let his head get well. Mr. Man seemed to get a hint out of this, and so he went home.

Miss Stokes, Lieut. Jones Are Married

Colorful Military Rites Attend Ceremony at All Souls.

Couple on Wedding Trip Plan Voyage Later to Europe.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

Everyone loves a wedding, be it large or small, but the one that has the edge on others in popularity is the one having, in addition to the white tulle and orange blossoms, the added glamour of resplendent uniforms, bright buttons and gleaming sabers.

All Souls' Memorial Church was the scene of a colorful military wedding yesterday afternoon when Miss Virginia Elizabeth Stokes, daughter of Col. and Mrs. Marcus Butler Stokes, became the bride of Lieut. Homer W. Jones, U. S. A., son of Mrs. Jones and the late Mr. Gomer Jones, of Taylor, Pa. The church was decorated with white peonies against a background of dark palms. At the altar there were two candelabra containing tall ivory tapers.

The ceremony was performed by Dr. Albert Joseph McCartney, pastor of the Church of the Covenant, at 4 o'clock, in the presence of members of the families and friends from Army posts near Washington.

Col. Stokes escorted his daughter to the altar.

Bridal Gown of Lace.

The bride wore a gown of heavy white lace made on long lines, with a close-fitting jacket which had long fitted sleeves. The flaring skirt ended in a fan-shaped train. Her veil of rare old lace and tulle, a family heirloom, was held in place by a coronet of point de Venice lace, on either side of which there was a small cluster of orange blossoms. She carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley.

Mrs. Marcus Butler Stokes, sister-in-law of the bride, was matron of honor. She wore a sheaf gown of powder blue lace, with a small fitted jacket. The straight skirt terminated in a medium-length train. Miss Elizabeth Lewis, of Chester, S. C., cousin of the bride, was the maid of honor. Her gown of the same shade as that worn by Mrs. Stokes was also of lace, with a skirt of flounces of matching net ending in a short train. Both attendants wore large picture hats of white rough straw trimmed with blue and white forget-me-nots, and slippers of powder blue. They carried armfuls of white gladioli.

Little Miss Marcia Hall Stokes, niece of the bride, was the flower girl. She wore a dainty frock of white organdie and a band of light blue ribbon on her head. She carried a basket of blue and white blossoms.

Arch of Sabers.

Capt. Wilson Persons served as best man and the ushers were Maj. Frank F. Scowden, Maj. Herbert J. Lawes and Lieut. Marcus Butler Stokes, jr., and Lieut. Hall Stokes, brothers of the bride.

The bride and bridegroom passed under the traditional arch of sabers in leaving the church.

Following the ceremony there was a reception at the home of Col. and Mrs. Stokes on Cathedral avenue for the two families and a few out-of-town guests and intimate friends. Mrs. Stokes, mother of the bride, wore an attractive gray and blue figured chiffon, a large white hat trimmed [illegible] and a shoulder corsage of gardenias. Mrs. Jones, mother of the bridegroom, attired in blue lace, also had a corsage of [illegible].

Later Lieut. and Mrs. Jones left on a motoring trip, the latter wearing a smart tweed ensemble of a very fine gray plaid. The blouse was of Irish lace. With this she wore a dark blue hat and had matching accessories. On June 13 the young couple will sail from New York on the President Harding for Europe. When [illegible] they will make their home in Washington, where Lieut. Jones is on duty with the Construction Division, office of the Quartermaster General.

Graduate Misses One Day In Twelve Years of School

Hagerstown, Md., June 7 (Spl.). Jane Rohrer, who graduated yesterday at the Hagerstown High School commencement exercises, completed 12 years in school with but a single day missed during that period. That one day was due to a misunderstanding; she had been informed there was no school that day.

MORAL STANDARDS of youth are swinging toward conservatism, thinks Elizabeth McBirney.

"FLAMING YOUTH standards are definitely out," says modern college youth in the person of George Wells.

Our Academic Department

First the Questions—

1. Is it correct to say: "It is a quarter till 6."

2. Are these forms ever permitted: Re-collect, re-mark, re-form.

3. Give the difference in meaning between refectory and refractory.

4. Are the following words correctly spelled: Ax, aesthetic, mediaeval, theatre, skillful, moustache.

5. Define and pronounce chamois.

6. Correct this sentence. "Will you sponsor for the contest?"

Then the Answers—

1. In telling time, the expressions a quarter of, till and to are all correct.

2. The hyphens distinguish them thus: Recollect—remember; re-collect—the act of collecting again. Remark—state or comment; re-mark—mark again. Reform—improve by change of form; re-form—form again, as: "Re-form the line."

3. Refectory is a noun meaning a room for refreshment, as a dining room. Refractory is primarily an adjective meaning obstinate.

4. The correct forms are: ax (preferred) or axe; esthetic or aesthetic; medieval (preferred) or mediaeval; theater (preferred) or theatre; skillful or skilful; mustache (preferred) or moustache.

5. A small goatlike antelope of the mountain ridges of Europe and Southwestern Asia; also the soft leather, used for various purposes, obtained from the skin of this animal. Other spellings are chammy, shammy, chamois, shammoy and shamoy. The various pronunciations of the leather are sham-i ("i" as in "it"); sha-wah or sha-moi ("a" in "sha" as in "ask"); sha-mwah the French pronunciation, must be used for the animal.

6. Say: "Will you sponsor the contest?" For is superfluous, since sponsor means act as security for. "He acted as sponsor for the contest" is also correct.

Getting Drunk Frowned Upon

Shocking Elders Seen as Being Atrocious Example of Poor Taste.

Smoking Is Acceptable but Shouldn't Be Encouraged Among Young.

Men and women shuttle out of college today somewhat wary of the hymeneal urge and more aware than their jazz-age forerunners that lean-faced judges are not lenient toward matrimonial hesitation. What are some of the moral ideas of these sober young graduates who are faced with more problems than prospective pay envelopes? This is the third in a series of articles based on interviews with representative graduates of Washington universities.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

THE MODERN student is more interested in religion, is more serious, than his forerunner of the past decade.

As to some of the more pertinent questions of right and wrong his creed might be expressed somewhat as follows:

Young persons should not be encourage to smoke, but should not be censured for doing so.

Drinking one or two cocktails is all right—for both men and women—but getting drunk is out of the question.

Marriage should not be entered into hastily, but if a divore is desired, and the couple is childless, it should be easy to obtain.

Shocking elders is neither smart nor in good taste.

Conservatism Again.

Would such conclusions as expressed in the views of representative graduates indicate the battle between ideals had ceased to become a battle between generations? Is modern youth swinging back to the conservatism of its forefathers?

In search of answers to these questions, the interviewer questioned Miss Elizabeth McBirney, of Boise, Idaho, honor graduate of American University. Seated in the library of her alma mater, this attractive, discerning young woman weighed every inquiry carefully before she answered.

"I have no ideas on divorce," she said frankly. "I think the question is not so much how and when divorces can be procured, but how persons who aren't ready to marry can be kept from doing so."

Did she think, then, the issue was to make marriage more difficult?

"It seems to me," she went on, "a question of education. Probably the experiences of those around us whose marriages haven't worked out well should go a long way toward warning us against jumping into wedlock."

Had Miss McBirney noticed any changes in the moral standards of her classmates during her four years in college?

She had. Whether is was actually a change of standards, she could not say, but certainly wholesale drinking and smoking were on the wane. In fact, it was her opinion the average college student has more important things to think about than defying traditions.

Robert Parker, of Cumberland, Md., another outstanding graduate of American University was questioned. Did he believe college students were growing more conservative?

He did. The matter of smoking and drinking, for instance, was no longer an issue.

Were they also concerned with religious discussions?

"Naturally, I would think they are," he replied. "I majored in religion. But still, I believe the average student is interested in religion as a side issue; his attitude toward it is a questioning one."

Did this mean the average college student was a doubter?

"Probably so," he answered. "But he is a conscientious doubter. He questions religoius tenets, for instance, not from the standpoint of criticism, but in order to know more about them.

Would these opinions be borne out by students from other universities?

Henry W. Herzog, in charge of publications at George Washington University, a 1929 graduate, was convinced the average student was becoming more interested in religion.

Flaming Youth Departs.

With the growing interest in religion and mounting concern for other serious subjects, was the average college student establishing more stable moral standards?

The question was put to George Wells, managing director of the Troubadours and a member of three Greek-letter fraternities at George Washington University.

"Well, for one thing," began Mr. Wells, "the 'flaming youth' standards are definitely out. Take, for instance, the question of drinking. It used to be argued right and left. Now, boys and girls rarely get drunk. But nobody takes offense if a person takes a highball or two.

William Helvestine, broad-shouldered, blond president of the student council of George Washington University, was non-committal on this subject.

What about drinking?

"It seems to me," he said, "liquor at the average party now is conspicuous by its absence."

What were some of Mr. Helvestine's views on marriage?

"I don't know why so many young persons rush into marriage," he said. "If more persons thought it over carefully, there would be fewer divorces. And if men thought it over carefully enough and waited to marry until they could support their wives, we would have fewer married women in offices taking jobs from unemployed men."

Do these opinions indicate youth and the older generation are at last agreed?

(Read in tomorrow's Post opinions of modern college graduates on art and literature.)

THE AVERAGE student is interested in religion, but considers it "a side issue," says Robert Parker.

"AT MOST PARTIES now, liquor is conspicuous by its absence," says George Helvestine.

American Girls Said to Dress Best in World

A Dress Designer Maintains They Always Have and Still Do.

NEW YORK, June 7 (AP).—American girls are better dressed than any others in the world, in the opinion of Eleanor Shaler, dress designer, actress, and novelist.

"The American girl always has been better dressed," said Miss Shaler, "and she still is. She may have less to do it on than ever before. But just the same she does it.

"The girl of today makes sure of one thing. However broke she may be, she has one good dress. That does for job hunting and for the most important 'dates.'"

Miss Shaler, who is a partner of Elizabeth Hawes, designer, recalled an incident of her acting days, when she and the actress with whom she shared an apartment found themselves in need of evening dresses. They went together to a sale and found a white velvet dress that fitted both of them for $19.75.

"One of us was always spilling turkey on it just when the other had to wear it the next night," she said. "But the idea was sensational all the same, and since we knew different people we didn't have to repeat on them.

"These days girls don't seem to run to evening dresses—I mean if they can have only one. A smart street ensemble is what they want. After all, there aren't many jobs you can look for in an evening dress.

"Our trick is being done more than ever in the best theatrical circles, and in plenty of other circles, too, nowadays. When one girl has an interview with a prospective employer, the others she lives with contribute their most prized items. She goes out finally like a bride, with something old, something new, and so on."

Perhaps from habit, Miss Shaler's home-designed wardrobe of what a young author should wear goes in for similar economies.

"It's a wardrobe that begins with one coat for two dresses, or three, instead of one dress for two girls or three," she said. "Also one hat for two dresses, and a variety of combinations."

'Invisible' Mural To Be Shown

It Can Be Viewed Only With Aid of Ultra Violet Rays.

PHILADELPHIA, June 7 (AP).—Three "invisible" murals, reputedly the first of their kind in the world, are to be shown on the walls of Benjamin Franklin Institute.

The paintings, depicting the life of Franklin, are drawn in fluorescent colors invisible to the human eye under normal light.

Only ultra-violet rays can bring out the hidden tints and shades of color. These beams from the far end of the spectrum will be called into play to uncover the concealed art for the public eye.

In painting the murals, Charles Bittinger, of Washington, was forced literally to "work in the dark." Since last year he has been wielding his brush under ordinary light, then turning on the ultra violet rays to see how his task was progressing.

Japanese Boy, Roosevelt Both In Strange Tale

Honolulu Newspaperwomen Come Here to Ferret Out Details.

PRESIDENT Franklin D. Roosevelt, a shipwrecked Japanese boy, and a seamen's chaplain in far-off Hawaii form the strangely assorted trio responsible for a Honolulu newspaper woman's long trek to the Nation's Capital.

Miss Emily V. Warinner, managing editor of the Friend, published in Hawaii, came to Washington ten days ago to hear in the President's own words the never-before-told story of the part his grandfather, Warren Delano, played in the colorful history of Manjiro Nakahama, a young Japanese who is given a large share of credit for opening the ports of Japan to the world.

Nakahama was shipwrecked off the coast of his native land in 1841, was rescued and brought to Fairhaven, Mass., by Capt. W. H. Whitfield. On the voyage to America, Honolulu was a port of call. There the young Japanese was treated so kindly by the Rev. S. C. Damon, seamen's chaplain, that when he wished to return to his own country he enlisted the chaplain's aid in fitting out a small boat.

Incidentally, it was this same Rev. Mr. Damon, who established The Friend, oldest newspaper west of the Rockies, and now managed by Miss Warinner.

Still a Secret.

But the part played by the President's grandfather in the story of Nakahama is still a secret to every one but Mr. Roosevelt and Miss Warinner. It will remain so until the newspaper woman publishes it.

"I don't know whether I'll write a book or a series of articles, but I shall certainly write something soon about the Japanese boy who did so much to bring about friendship between our country and his," said Miss Warinner yesterday afternoon at the home of Mrs. C[illegible]kum, 5322 Colorado avenue, where she is visiting. She left last night for the West Coast, and after a short stay there will return to Honolulu.

It was while she was touring Japan last year the Honolulu woman journalist first decided to write the story of Nakahama. The Japanese boy's history had already become a legend in Hawaii. She learned he was deeply revered in his native land.

A few days after she had returned to Honolulu from Japan, Miss Warinner read in a press dispatch of Viscount Ishii's visit with President Roosevelt; of the President's chance remark to the effect his grandfather had given impetus to early Pacific shipping.

To Emily Warinner, early Pacific shipping and Manjiro Nakahama were almost synonymous. Sure that she was on the trail of something new and interesting for her story she wrote the President, asking him if he would tell her the connection between Warren Delano and the Japanese boy. The President invited her to come to Washington. She caught the next boat.

Our Surprising Ideas.

"I've enjoyed my stay here immensely," she said. "But I've been rather surprised at some of the conceptions you people in the States have of the islands. I've discovered you are quite disturbed about our 'Japanese menace.' We don't consider the Japanese the least bit of a menace. Far from it. They make excellent citizens; they're extremely clean, and must know a great deal about rearing children because there are never any young Japanese delinquents."

As for all the girls on the mainland who yearn to go to the romantic islands to work for a year or so—they'd better stay home unless they have definite promises of jobs, believes Miss Warinner.

"Lots of school teachers used to come over from the States. We wanted them. We needed them. But now we're giving the positions to our own normal school and university graduates. So there are no openings for others. Office workers have about the same chance of finding employment in Hawaii as they have on the mainland, I believe."

Grandmothers Detailed Into Field of Education

Bachrach Photo.

DOTING GRANDMOTHERS should be educated not to spoil their grandchildren nor to interfere with parental discipline, believes Mrs. Simon S. Lapham, national treasurer and former home education chairman of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers.

No More Spoiling, Is the Rule as Parent-Teachers Association Would Have It in Disciplinary Program.

THE doting grandmother, who, for generations has reveled in her privilege of spoiling children, is now to be detailed to the field of education. Asked to substitute for a guidance manual the candy stick, the grandmother, along with the mother, is falling into the general scheme of parental education now being launched by Parent-Teacher Associations.

This sidelight was thrown upon the educational problem by Mrs. Simon S. Lapham, of Providence, R. I., National treasurer and former home education chairman of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers. She is here in the interest of setting up a new form of treasury procedure for the National Congress.

"A child's character training should begin the first moment he opens his eyes," said Mrs. Lapham. "He should learn immediately the world isn't his oyster, until he has earned a right to his place in it. Grandmothers, who claim their share of his affection from the start, should also be willing to take their responsibility in the disciplinary program.

"When the grandmother goes over a mother's head to spoil the child," added Mrs. Lapham, herself a proud grandparent, "she is falling down on her job. Instead of being a help to both the child and his mother, she is a hindrance. Furthermore, she is tearing down the morale of the entire household, and has not earned her right to grandparenthood."

With years of experience and greater maturity, grandmothers have more to contribute than is realized, in the scheme of child education, Mrs. Lapham pointed out. "They should be," she said, "the calm stabilizers, the balance wheels and the emotional bulwarks in homes. Instead, they too often forget all about their own early experiences and difficulties in child rearing, and fall back upon the stolen pleasure of spoiling the child.

"Child discipline should be well established and perfectly understood between parents and grandparents. The parents, naturally should outline their own programs. The grandparents should be willing and eager to cooperate intelligently.

"When the child goes to nursery school or kindergarten, both parents and grandparents should understand the procedure there and assist by carrying out the program in the home. Intelligent cooperation between parents and schools will eliminate much of the danger of psychological complexes in future years."

Bronx Called More Romantic Than Tropics

It's Got More Glamor Than Tahiti, Says Author Van Loon.

NEW YORK, June 7 (AP).—To Hendrik Van Loon, author and lecturer, who is just back from a five-month cruise over the South Seas, the Bronx is a more romantic spot than Tahiti.

"If you have romantic illusions," he counseled, "go to the Bronx, but never to Tahiti."

Thus did the self-confessed educator of children and author of books simplifying world geography and world history dispel the traditional magic glory of the isles of the South Seas—those fabled spots whose glamorous names and picture book sunsets for centuries have drawn the romantic wanderer.

"The Bronx," said Van Loon, "is neat and clean, and, above all, a train for Manhattan is just around the corner. There you can preserve your illusions of romance.

"But Tahiti—nothing but small towners with a watch ticking in one vest pocket and a New England conscience ticking in the other. And there they sit making love to the brown-skinned maidens their New England consciences have made them marry and wondering what to do with their children that are neither one thing nor the other.

"Is it any wonder," asked Van Loon, "that they die of dry rot?"

Then Van Loon produced a picture he had drawn of Tahiti. "See," he said, pointing to a row of trees, "how prim it is. You might as well be in New England.

From Tahiti in particular Van Loon passed on to tropical regions in general as habitats for the white man. Commenting on the vital importance of geography and climate as a factor in the development of individual civilizations he declared that, except as trading outposts, the tropics are "out" for the white man.

"He keeps his white skin, but psychologically he becomes a native. Something queer happens in his brain after two generations and we find a combination that can not survive."

Van Loon, who is something of an artist, is afraid he is going to learn how to draw. "And that," he feels, "would be fatal. Now, I am good in my own lousy way. If I learned to draw I would be lousy in some one else's good way."

His sketchbook is filled with drawings made during the cruise, most of them in Dutch Java.

Green Will Be Smart, Prophesy Style Leaders

New York, June 5 (AP).—Green was predicted as the newest and most fashionable color for fall at a luncheon of style leaders today. Greens in olive and bluish shades, it was said, would predominate.

Dr. Joseph Jastrow, psychologist, said green in nature suggests plenty and in clothes it indicates "a mood of returning welfare."

Woman Politician Falls in Love With Opponent, Gives Up Career

LONDON, June 7 (Spl.).—Anti-suffragists for years have been wont to marshal as their most convincing argument the theoretical situation of the lady politician who would fall in love with her opponent.

"Suppose," they would say, "a woman entered politics and was a strong adherent of one party. And then suppose she met a man who was an equally strong adherent of another party. And suppose they fell in love. What on earth would she do?"

This question was answered recently when Katherine Tennant, one of the most troublesome spellbinders of the Liberal party, met Walter E. Elliot, British minister of agriculture, stanch Tory leader. The two had long been recognized as political enemies of the most uncompromising sort. Then they met personally, were thrown together and—fell in love.

Political circles buzzed when the engagement of Miss Tennant to Mr. Elliot was announced. Newspaper reporters dashed to the home of the woman liberal at Glenconnor Castle, North Berwick, to learn her postnuptial plans.

They learned to their surprise she was not only going to give up her own political career, but to assist her prospective husband in his.

"I am going to give up active participation in the Liberal party as a matter of course," she said. "I have already resigned from the Liberal Federation.

"I believe my job is to help my husband in his career and that I can be much more useful in that way than by pursuing a pathway diametrically opposed to his political faith. When a woman marries a man she must be his partner in everything or their happiness will go to pieces.

"Besides, politics are not what they were. There is a broader conception of service to the nation than existed in the old days of party strife. The national government is symptomatic of that."

Auto Exhibition Features Many New Comforts

Cars Especially Adapted to Easy Handling on the Part of Women.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

NEW colors, new lines, and a myriad of new conveniences contribute to the see-worthiness of the cars displayed this week at the General Motors automobile show.

Gentlemen guilty of aspersions such as, "Might have known it was a woman driving!" will be repaid with a vengeance. From now on they know it's apt to be a woman driving. For General Motors has seen to it the new cars are as well adapted to small feet and dainty hands, as to sizes 10, and a man-size spread. They've even gone so far as to provide luxuries with a special appeal to feminine fancifulness.

Roomy little compartments in the dashboards can hold an assortment of hats, a make-up kit, a change of shoes, and a bathing suit. Let the lesser half beware who dares to keep his dust clothes, and grease tins there.

Wide metal gas feeds suit high heels, and one inch vamps. Arm rests on either side of the seat will enable a weary driver to relax comfortably.

A most spectacular advance is seen in steering wheels. One of the larger cars has a banjo type, guaranteed to be less tiring than any other kind. It enables a woman to procure a comfortable grip without straining the muscles in her fingers, and it transmits none of the shock from the wheels or motor.

Seats are easier than ever to move forward or back. Colors are keeping up with summer ensembles. The parakeet green of a large coupe will not only set off the clothes of the driver, but with its soft shading will flatter blondes and brunettes and turn a Titan into a Cleopatra.

A large sleek limousine goes them all one better. Snugly hidden under the chauffer's quarters is an ample umbrella neatly swathed in a leatherette cover. "Jeems" has only to alight, press a half-hidden button to have a rain protector right at hand. Its large proportions are sufficient to accommodate madam, a poodle and a pekingese.

Husbands fend for themselves.

The varied assortment of cars has proved a drawing card to motor enthusiasts. And so has the free chance to win one with a lucky number. Tomorrow night at 9 o'clock the tickets will be drawn. Somebody is going to be the luckier with an olive green Oldsmobile sedan.

A Handy Pair.

Those who lack pantry space will be tickled with a pair of molded aluminum utensils featured by a local department store. With one cover that fits both, they do the work of four pans. Without the cover, the Dutch oven becomes a four and a half quart kettle for jelly, preserves, and other delicacies. With the cover it tenders tough meats in a shorter time, with less fuel, and infinitely less trouble than the ordinary pan.

Without the cover it becomes a skillet, skilled in browning food quickly and evenly with scarcely any smoke. So far it's one of the best little upside down cake bakers to appear on the market.

The silver-like hammered finish of this handy pair identifies them as products of a famous manufacturer.

House Fragrances.

The same French perfumes which women use to attain an added bit of allure are available now as house fragrances! Four odors, re-creations of famous scents, come in highly concentrated form. One drop on a light bulb will scent the room like a fragrant breeze.

This fragrance is amazingly economical. You may use it a hundred times for a tiny fraction of what the imported perfumes cost.

Here are names and descriptions: L'Opera, "the fragrance of the mad gay world of after dark." Gardenia, alluring hint of spring and the witchery of your. Sensation, "captivating amorous, breathing romance and mystery. Dreams, "a haunting exotic scent whispering oriental secrets."

Dress Your Bottles.

Why have a bar at all if it isn't representative? Representative not only of choice whiskys and wines, but new and smart bar equipment.

If the pocketbook won't allow, don't try to pick up a complete assemblage in one week. But start today. Begin with the bottle labels. They change the appearance of a bottle of wine as successfully as a collar does a dog.

As a matter of fact, these particular labels resemble dog collars. A metal tab drapes over the neck of the bottle with a shiny chain. The tab bears the identification, "Port," "Sherry" or "Brandy."

Brides Will Love It.

Another suggestion for the June bride's shower are the unusual relish dishes available in an F street shop. They're made of heavy and durable Japanese pottery. A straw-covered handle and top give them an informal touch and removes them from the ordinary.

Cotton Ties to Be Seen Around During Summer

By Amos Parrish.

NEW YORK, June 7.—Though the tie is one of the smallest items of a man's wearing apparel, it's almost sure to receive first attention. Because it is generally the most colorful thing he wears. One of the reasons why this summer's ties are going to be more attention-getting than ever.

Cotton ties . . . the kind that wash. They're going to be worn more this summer than for years. In the same good-looking, colorful patterns men choose all year round in silks.

Light in Weight.

They have a crisp, clean look which checks up with the way men want to look in warm weather. And though the tie is such a small item, the light weight of these cottons makes a difference in the comfort and coolness of the neck section.

Many of these cotton ties have plain white grounds with bright figures . . . checks and stripes in particular. These go well with linen and tropical cloth suits.

Foulards Lead Silks.

Of course most men will stick to their silks. And most of the silks are due to be foulards. Because foulard is the lightest of all tie silks and comes in fine summer colors. Clean, clear blues, reds and yellows that tie up well with summer suit colorings.

Bow ties . . . or bat ties, if you prefer to call them that . . . are back. You'll see them in allover pattern foulards and in the slightly heavier striped rep silks.

White Grounds.

White grounds are important in summer neckties. Especially when the tie is worn with the somewhat deeper colored shirts many men are wearing.

Other light grounds, such as canary, light blue and tan, will also be worn more than previously for the same shirt reason.

So far as patterns are concerned, allover designs will take the honors in foulards. But more and more men will be seen in stripes, particularly the neat, evenly spaced bars of various widths in bright combinations of color.

Men's ties of the types described may be found in Washington in all the better class haberdasheries and department stores.

CAPITAL KITCHEN

Left-Overs Can Be Aristocratic Dishes and Here's How.

By Susan Mills.

NO LONGER are housewives shy about admitting today's hash was yesterday's roast. For there are any number of ways to make the left-over meat really aristocratic.

Here are a few.

Meat Loaf.
(French).

Here meat loaf is not used in our generally accepted meaning of the term, but is, instead, a loaf of bread hollowed out and filled with a well-made hash. This is the way a French cook makes hash:

To each pound of cold minced beef, allow 2 ounces of raw liver. Melt a tablespoon of butter in a saucepan, into this slice an onion and let it cook gently for ten minutes. Then remove the bits of onion with a fork. The flavor in the butter is sufficient. Then put in the liver, cut in fine pieces. Cook slowly for five minutes, then add enough stock or water to cover.

Season with 1 teaspoon of mixed spice for each 2 pounds of meat. Add plenty of salt but no pepper. Instead of the spice, 2 laurel leaves and 2 sprigs of parsley may be used. Next, stir in the cold minced meat which has been well mixed with a heaping tablespoon of flour for each pound of meat. Put the pan over the flame and stir until the hash just boils. Add a little more water, if necessary. Cook gently until the hash is warmed through.

This is the hash that is used to make "meat loaf." Cut the top crust off a new loaf of bread. Scoop out the inside, leaving only a hollow shell. Fill with the hash. Put back the crust. Pour gravy over the loaf until the crust is well soaked. Put in a greased tin and bake in a quick over until the crust begins to brown. Serve hot, slice down through the loaf.

Scalloped Beef.

2 cups minced cooked beef
1½ cups hot white sauce
1 cup bread crumbs
½ to 1 cup buttered crumbs
¼ teaspoon salt.

Mix the meat, sauce bread crumbs and salt. Place in a buttered baking dish or ramekins and cover with buttered crumbs. Bake in a moderate oven for 15 or 20 minutes.

Creamed ham is a delicious hurry-up dish, and it is doubly tasty when highly seasoned. A teaspoon of Worcestershire sauce to each cup of white sauce gives an added zest.

What Today Means

By Mary Blake.
"Gemini"

If June 8 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 9 to 11 a. m., from 2 to 4 p. m. and from 8 to 10 p. m. The danger periods are from 6 to 8 a. m. from 11 a. m. to 1 p. m. and from 9 to 11 p. m.

Business activities in the morning, very likely will be brisk, but as the day wears on, there will be possibly an evidence of a desire to put off interviews and decisions.

The woman born on June 8 is partial, in the way of recreation, to literature. If born on this date, it might be advisable to refrain from indulging in indiscriminate reading, and to start making it a practice of selecting your books with care.

The child born on June 8, when going through the age of adolescence, will require sympathetic supervision and training. Its character in later years will reflect, to a great degree, lasting impressions its very impressionistic mind has received during its formative years in its home environment. Vulgarity and harshness must never be allowed to taint this child's mind. Possessing a sensitive nature, its feeling can be easily hurt.

If a man and born on June 8, your honesty and sincerity of purpose, combined with an indomitable amount of will, shall prove the requisite qualities needed to gain a gratifying position in social, business, as well as civic affairs. If on this day you remember to "do unto others as you would have them do unto you," your results will prove gratifying.

How to Keep Well

To Cure Heat Cramps.

Evidence continues to pile up that heat cramps can be prevented as well as cured. The remedy is cheap, easily made available, and, furthermore, is pleasant to take. It is common table salt. In some industries where the men have suffered frequently and severely from heat cramps the management provides boxes of hard tablets, each containing 16 grains of common salt. These boxes are placed near water coolers, and men who come to drink are encouraged to take a tablet. There is no objection to a man putting a few tablets in his pocket, particularly if he has an outside job that takes him away from the water faucet and the pill box.

The plan of carrying a few tablets in the pocket should prove useful to farmers when they are pitching hay.

One of these tablets, or a solution of mildly salt water, is also the best cure for heat cramps. Cannon estimates that a man doing hard manual labor often excretes as much as ten quarts of water a day. Let us say that the man in question is stoking coal under boilers. He makes a great deal of heat, and, to make matters worse, his work is done in hot air. By wearing the minimum number of garments, and those of lightweight and loose texture, he does something to get rid of the heat. To further the job of cooling his sweat glands pour out rivers of sweat. Unfortunately for the particular job in hand, this sweat contains salt as well as water. When the loose water is pretty well drained out of his tissues his thirst warns him of the danger and he goes to the cooler and drinks.

The Talking Sparrow Murders

BY DARWIN TEILHET

KRESCH walked out. I heard him bang her door. I went to the window. I caught Mischa's attention and motioned for her to get behind the bushes. Mischa's room had only one window. It did not face the street. Kresch slammed her door shut again, waddled back into my room. His head was down on his shoulders. His face was gray like putty and there were heavy lines in his face as if some one had rubbed grooves in the putty with a thick finger. He sat down on the chair between me and the door.

"Where's Geigen?"

"He and Fraulein Edrich will meet us at the Polizeiamt."

"Geigen's cleared himself?"

"Uhm," he leaned forward. "We know definitely once we talk with Herr Carlson. I was right, Herr Tat-zohn. Everything I worked out in the comments I showed you was correct.

"Everything except who La Roc was. But I always said he was a man. Fedl had the idea La Roc was a woman."

"A woman?"

Kresch made a grimace. "Yes, but Fedl is not logical. He jumps and guesses. I work things out. You see we have all the facts now. It only remained to determine who La Roc is. I have."

One Puzzling Thing.

I stood up with my back half turned to Kresch, opened my cigarette box and took out a cigarette. It was four minutes after 11 o'clock by my desk clock. I had to act and do it in a hurry.

"The only thing that still puzzles me was why Kohlmann was killed in the way he was," Kresch mumbled on. "I know now. The explanation came to me last night. We've agreed Spalger must have known that Walther Kohlmann had found out that the books were falsified." Kresch was so absorbed in his theory that for the first time since I had met him he forgot his formal politeness and left out the invariable "Herr" or "Frau" so absolutely necessary according to the incalculable German mind before every name.

"What would Spalger do? Immediately tell his associates. Who were they? Taubek for one. La Roc, the other. La Roc and Taubek, as we know, capture Walther Kohlmann, take him to the cellar in the Handelshof Hotel. Why the Handelshof Hotel? Because Taubek owns the hotel. No one would think of looking for Walther in Heidelberg.

Fed by La Roc.

"When would the prisoner be fed? Morning, noon and evening. And by whom? Either La Roc or Taubek. Probably by Taubek, because he could go in and out of the hotel without arousing suspicion. Now we know Walther Kohlmann managed to escape from the cellar and was down in the sewer by noon of the twenty-seventh. If he escaped before he was fed in the morning, the escape would have been discovered earlier. So Walther must have escaped between the morning and noon feed. Agree?"

"What? . . . Oh, yes." Down the street an automobile was slowly coming toward the pension. I walked over to my dresser. I wanted something heavy and hard and easy to grasp in one hand.

"Taubek goes to the cellar around noon. Discovers Walther is gone. We can only surmise what actually occurred, but this seems the only possible conclusion. The lower cellar is dark. Taubek must have looked down it, immediately discovering Walther was gone. The opening into the sewer from the cellar is obscured. Taubek would be thrown into a panic by the fact Walther had escaped, didn't notice, or didn't suspect that Walther was in the sewer. What would Taubek do? My belief is that he'd immediately try to get in touch with La Roc.

Scene Reconstructed.

"Meanwhile Walther is hiding in the sewer. After a week of captivity he would not be strong. He tries to climb up the iron rungs. Perhaps falls several times. When La Roc hears the news from Taubek he doesn't try to get out of the country. No, he stays. Why? Remember this: It is March 27. In a few days the silk company will be in operation. They can sell their stock. A fortune is nearly in La Roc's grasp. So La Roc and Taubek must have returned to the hotel to pick up some trace of Walther. We know they returned. This is why we know.

"We have proof that Walther finally managed to climb to the gratings and push a note through to the street, attracting the attention of the newsstand bok. We also know the newsstand boy was shot after he delivered the note. All of this isn't guesswork. It's definite fact. What would you say was the explanation?"

There was a heavy porcelain candlestick on my dresser. I picked it up. "I don't know," I replied.

Isn't this the explanation? Isn't this the only explanation possible? Taubek and La Roc must have arrived in front of the hotel just as the newsstand boy was picking up the piece of paper. Be careful with that candlestick. You make me nervous. Let me have it. Sit down and listen to me." He got up and replaced the candlestick on the dresser, sat down and continued: "They must have arrived just as the boy was picking up the note. By the time Taubek and La Roc had gone over to the sewer and discovered that some one could be down there, the newsstand boy was on his way to Herr Kohlmann. There were La Roc and Taubek. One would immediately follow the boy. Try to see what the note was. Which one would go? We know one stayed."

Mind Made Up.

I had made up my mind now. His question momentarily disconcerted me. "If la Roc was the leader he'd probably stay, wouldn't he, to make sure Walther didn't attract more attention?"

"No, I don't necessarily think so. Taubek would probably stay to watch, as his presence in that neighborhood could easily be explained and he would be more apt to know about the empty office. We found a bullet groove in one of the offices where the bullet was shot from."

"You found a bullet mark, did you?"

"Yes. Fedl went over the office rooms again. The mark's there. A long groove. I think it's safe to assume that la Roc would have driven to meet Taubek and his car would be near by. He goes after the news stand boy but doesn't catch him until after the message is delivered. He must have been in a frenzy of fear to kill the boy. But he did. Kohlmann misreads the note; thinks it says to come down alone. And he does. Taubek is waiting in the Karschen Building. Kohlmann comes down and Kohlmann has to be killed or the whole chance for the fortune is finished. Kohlmann is killed. Walther probably drowns that night."

I pointed to the bathroom. "Excuse me a moment. Go on talking, I can hear you."

I half closed the bathroom door. "But how and why was Taubek killed?"

Kresch's mushy voice raised slightly. "That is easily explained. Taubek called Geigen on the telephone. Or, at least, that is what Geigen claims. Taubek told Geigen to come to the inn and get the letters Elaine Edrich had written."

The Ruse Worked.

"But why the inn where we were staying?"

Kresch laughed harshly. "That's exactly why Taubek came. If it hadn't been for the girl——"

I interrupted: "Herr Kresch! Can you come here? There's something in here—hurry!"

As he came to the door and his surprised, puzzled, weary face shoved anxiously into the opening, I placed the heavy wooden towel holder accurately into place over his head. He tumbled forward and I caught him so he wouldn't smash his head against the bathtub.

Mischa was already in the Benz, and the man Tagenbrick had hired to drive the car to Baden-Baden was just starting it when I jumped in.

Darrow Board Will Dissolve Before July 1

Aged Chairman Fears Heat of Capital; Will Rest in Europe.

Fearful that summer temperatures here may prove too strenuous for him physically, Clarence Darrow yesterday issued a statement that his National Recovery Review Board would conclude its work and dissolve on or before July 1, and he would go direct to Europe for a rest.

He said the exact dissolvement date will depend upon the time required to complete hearings and investigations in industries now scheduled.

"Before closing its offices and its labors," the statement said, "the board will issue a final report to the President reviewing its investigations and presenting its conclusions."

Although approximately 1,400 complaints from small business firms have not been acted upon, the nature of numerous complaints makes it impracticable to hold public hearings, members of the board said.

The statement was issued after a formal meeting of the board, after which Mr. Darrow expressed pleasure over the decision. He said his rest abroad would be lengthy.

The board, appointed by President Roosevelt to investigate alleged monopolistic practics under the NRA, recently criticized various phases of the recovery administration. When it was organized in February last, the NRA allotted it approximately $50,000 for operating expenses. It is understood that only about half of this amount has been expended.

Bristol Council Raises City Workers' Salaries

Bristol, Va., June 7 (Spl.).—Through re-allocation of the $259,101 funds provided in the proposed budget, the Bristol, Va., council has made possible salary increases in varying degrees for police and school teachers and the city manager, and appropriated $30,000 for the sinking fund.

The police appropriation was not increased, but six men will do the work for which seven were provided last year, and thus will get pay raises. City Manager J. F. McCrary will get $250 instead of $200 monthly, with an additional $25 per month for personal automobile or taxi expenses.

Star College Pitcher's Burial Service Held

Whitestone, Va., June 7 (AP).—Funeral services were held here this afternoon for George Sanders, Jr., 19-year-old Richmond University sophomore, who died in a Richmond hospital from automobile injuries.

Sanders was star pitcher of the Richmond baseball team and had received several offers from big league clubs. Following the services at his late home he was buried in the churchyard of Whitestone Methodist Church.

Gold Seeking and Swimming To Feature Wanderbird Hike

Trip Down Bullneck Run Sunday Will Reveal Superb Scenery.

By Robert Shosteck.

Swimming, a gold hunt and superb scenery are in store for wanderbirds and their friends who plan to go on Sunday's trip down Bullneck Run. The group will meet at noon in front of The Post Building for the 11-mile ride by chartered bus to Swink's Mill, the starting point of the hike. The round-trip fare will be about 40 cents. Members are requested to phone in reservations Saturday afternoon or evening. Those making such reservations will be given preference in case of lack of seats. Phone Nat. 4205 Br. 132.

From Swink's Mill the group will walk along the highway a short distance to the first dirt road on the right, following this road to Mr. Scott's house. Mr. Scott is a cordial old gentleman who was one of the first in the Yukon gold rush. He has resided in this mansion for many years and is very familiar with the surrounding countryside, particularly its mineral resources.

Just beyond the house the hikers will turn down an old road which leads to the run. The woods about this "road," now a good trail, are very interesting botanically. The writer has found checkerberries in abundance and has seen several ginseng plants, one of the rarest species about Washington. The dried root of this plant is worth as much as $10 a pound! A wide variety of ferns are found along the creeks and on moist rocks. The walking fern is perhaps the most interesting. This plant propagates itself by rooting at the tip of the frond, the new roots producing a new fern. The Virginia grape fern is one of the most delicate species, vying in beauty with the maidenhair and Massachusetts ferns.

We reach the Potomac, opposite Scott Island after a short walk down Bullneck Run. Those in the group who plan to go swimming will halt here, the men selecting as their "bathhouse" the woods about 500 feet up river, the women making use of the shelter behind the rock. Dr. Stokes will lead a group up the trail to Prospect Rock, a promontory nearly 250 feet above sea level. From this point the group can see the winding course of the Potomac for several miles in each direction.

The hikers and swimmers will reunite about 5 o'clock for the return trip up the run to the old gold mine and the sluices. While there is gold aplenty in the many veins of quartz found in these hills, it cannot be mined profitably in this locality. The abandoned tunnels, flumes and pits bear mute testimony to vain hopes of a group of gold seekers many decades ago. Crystalline quartz, soapstone, iron pyrites, and mica are found in the rocks above the Run. Many lumps of quartz contain scattered hexagonal voids. Crystals of soluble minerals once occupied these spaces.

Many of our larger predatory birds, as well as scavengers, are found commonly along Bullneck Run. Several species of owls, hawks and the turkey buzzard have been seen along the run. Scores of swallowtail butterflies cavort about the willows in the mud flats near the mouth of the Run. These are nearly all young males, awaiting the day when they will have sufficient strength to oust the elder males, which now hold sway over fields and woodland.

Bullneck Run crosses the highway about one-fourth mile upstream from the mine. The hikers walk down the road about a mile, where the busses leave at 6 p. m. for Washington.

Hollar Is Held Without Bond

Charged in Hagerstown Slaying; Trial Soon Expected.

Hagerstown, Md., June 7 (Spl.).—Allen L. Hollar, confessed slayer of George R. Saum, 22, young married man who took Hollar's daughter, Jane, 16, on a week-end trip to Washington, was held without bond for the next session of the grand jury at a hearing before Magistrate Richard H. Sweeney today.

Hollar did not testify, despite the fact that he had requested a hearing. He listened intently while Dr. Victor D. Miller testified that Saum died from a punctured liver, caused by a bullet; heard Carl Smith, witness to the shooting and neighbor of Saum, describe the attack. Police Capt. Clarence Emmert said Hollar had confessed to the shooting, stating that he had borrowed the revolver a week prior to the shooting.

Hollar's wife was at the hearing, but his daughter, whose disappearance led to the fatal attack, was absent.

Saum told police while he was being held here that the girl, who had requested him to take her to Washington to see a cousin, had left his car two days later near her home, but feared to return. The girl went back to Washington, where she was found by Capital police nearly a week after her disappearance.

Authorities indicated that the May grand jury would be recalled, permissible under a new law, and Hollar likely will be tried on a first degree murder charge within a month. The next regular court term is in November.

Both men plead guilty to the theft of articles, valued at more than $100, from Herbert Ecker, Sams Creek, and Abner L. Devilbiss, Union Bridge.

Smith, of Cambridge, and a daughter of the late John R. and Mary Moore Gray. She is survived by one son, Dr. Percy Gray Smith, of Palisades Park, N. J.

Funeral services will be held tomorrow at 2 p. m., in the Methodist Protestant Church, of Vienna, with the Rev. W. C. Mumford officiating. Interment will be in the Methodist Episcopal Church Cemetery.

Man Drowned as Cable Sinks Towing Rowboat

Norfolk, Va., June 7 (Spl.).—One man was drowned and two others narrowly escaped the same fate today when a rowboat in which they were towing a dredge cable, sank in the Southern Branch off the Royster Guano Co. at Money Point.

When the boat sank under the weight of the cable from the dredge Alice, Thomas Basnight, 24, of South Norfolk, failed to come up to the top. Dorsey White and an unidentified man said it was all they could do to save their own lives.

Virginia Auto Licenses Show Marked Increase

Richmond, June 7 (AP).—John Q. Rhodes, director of the division of motor vehicles, today announced that passenger automobile licenses issued up to June 1 showed an increase of 49,280 over the same date last year, and truck licenses an increase of 3,059, a total increase of 23.5 per cent.

This big increase, together with an increase in bus line receipts, has pulled down to less than $1,000,000 the decrease in State revenue from these sources over those of last year, despite the reduction of approximately 50 per cent in the cost of passenger car tags.

WASH OUT 15 MILES OF KIDNEY TUBES

Win Back Pep . . . Vigor . . . Vitality

Medical authorities agree that your kidneys contain 15 MILES of tiny tubes or filters which help to purify the blood and keep you healthy.

If you have trouble with too frequent bladder passages with scanty amount causing burning and discomfort, the 15 MILES of kidney tubes need washing out. This danger signal may be the beginning of nagging backache, leg pains, loss of pep and vitality, getting up nights, lumbago, swollen feet and ankles, rheumatic pains and dizziness.

If kidneys don't empty 3 pints every day and get rid of 4 pounds of waste matter, your body will take up these poisons causing serious trouble. It may knock you out and lay you up for many months. Don't wait. Ask your druggist for DOAN'S PILLS . . . a doctor's prescription . . . which has been used successfully by millions of kidney sufferers for over 40 years. They give quick relief and will help to wash out the 15 MILES of kidney tubes.

But don't take chances with strong drugs or so-called "kidney cures" that claim to fix you up in 15 minutes, for they may seriously injure and irritate delicate tissues. Insist on DOAN'S PILLS . . . the old reliable relief that contain no "dope"-forming drugs. Be sure you get DOAN'S PILLS at your druggist. © 1934, Foster-Milburn Co.

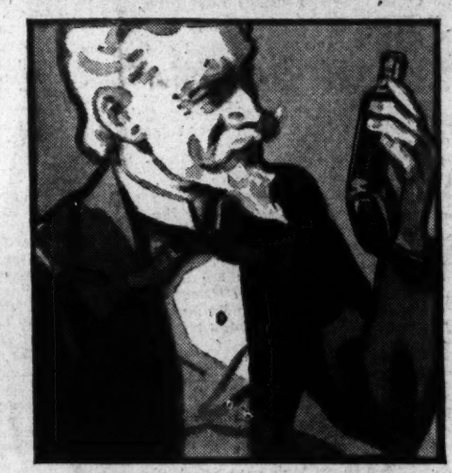
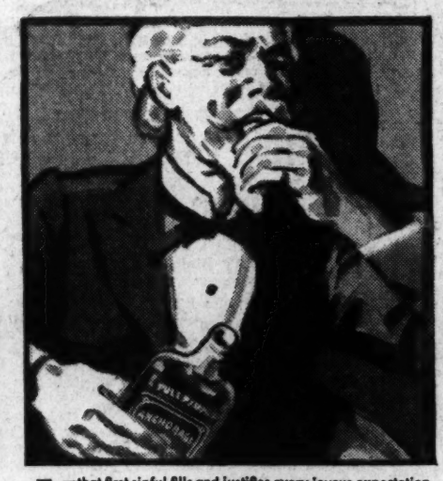
1 The connoisseur's first test of a Glenmore product—either a straight whiskey or a blend of straight whiskies. He gently inhales—Ah! what a bouquet!



2 The old aristocrat replaces the cork—he holds the bottle to the light—the deep amber, nature's glorious coloring for a well-matured product—gratifies him.

3 He now shakes the bottle—the slow dissolving bubbles give him additional assurance of fine ingredients and proper ageing.

4 With happy anticipation, the drink is poured—and



5 —that first sipful fills and justifies every joyous expectation. Here is a true liquor of bourbons! Each drop a revelation to an epicure—and an incomparable delight—

6 And now once more that inimitable aroma—as the glass is moved slowly beneath sensitive nostrils. There can be no doubt—this is a Glenmore product—straight whiskey at its best.

"I know straight whiskies of old"

STRAIGHT whiskies—and blends of straight whiskies—have always held first rank among men who know and accept only the best.

A goodly percentage of such men have insisted upon Glenmore products because this company has long been famous as an organization of "straight whiskey men." For over 60 years they have made and marketed only straight whiskies and blends of straight whiskies. They early developed exclusive processes. From the selection of the grains to the final bottling, they found ways to make the product better. A conscientious and undeviating policy of maintaining the highest standards of manufacture has made possible the four brands which are today re-establishing the qualities of the pre-prohibition era.

Old Thompson—Glenmore's finest blend of straight whiskies made since 1879—with a mellow flavor that's a standing challenge to many a bonded product.

Tom Hardy—a masterpiece of blending—a rare combination of straight whiskies only. It costs far less than you'd expect.

Anchorage—a fine straight whiskey—100 proof—the new pacemaker among popular priced brands. Aged by the calendar and not by the clock.

Won't you investigate Glenmore products? Read the labels—learn their character and composition. Try them all. One of the four will exactly meet the requirements of your palate and your purse.

Boxing Camp Turned Into Uproar

Brown Says Challenger Is Not in Condition to Fight June 14.

Asbury Park, N. J., June 7 (AP).—An innocent little ballyhoo stunt turned into one of those guns nobody thought was loaded today when Bill Brown, member of the New York State Athletic Association, got fooling with the trigger and all but blew Primo Carnera's heavyweight title defense against Max Baer, a week from tonight, right out of existence.

Brown watched the brawny challenger box nine rounds and then announced that he would recommend tomorrow to the other two commission members, John J. Phelan and D Walker Wear, that the match be postponed a month or called off entirely.

Turned Into Uproar.

Brown's statement turned the fight camp into an uproar, brought howls of protest from Madison Square Garden, and left the Baer handlers, who suggested the postponement yesterday as a ballyhoo stunt, looking like small boys who forgot to let go of a lighted skyrocket.

"If that's the best Baer can do," the militant, white-haired commissioner announced after watching the challenger clown through nine rounds with four sparring partners, "then he shouldn't be permitted to fight Carnera at all.

"He is not in physical condition to fight for the heavyweight championship, and the public should know that and be prepared. He needs another month of hard work, either that or the fight should be called off entirely."

Dempsey Involved.

The statement stirred up more excitement than any fight camp has seen since the time Jack Dempsey bandaged his left arm one night during training for his comeback against Sharkey and "accidentally" let a newspaperman "discover" that old iron mike, his famous left hook, was in a sling.

Strangely enough, it was Dempsey, now holding a 7½ interest in Baer, who touched off today's fireworks by suggesting yesterday that the challenger needed another week's work to regain the condition he was in when he knocked out Max Schmeling last summer.

So today Brown came down to have a look for himself at Baer's condition, and what he saw pleased him not at all. Slow, lacking dash and fire, punching only in spurts and then not very hard, Baer turned in a very ordinary workout. His general condition, however, seemed good.

Three Shoot 71s, Lead In Open

Cruickshank, Lacey and Cox Top Sarazen by Two Strokes.

Many Stars Far Behind; Lawson Little Has 83, Armour an 82.

that daner meant nothing to the cool-headed New York Italian. He was in the rought and bunkers time and again, but shot his way out brilliantly. He had a 38—35, with deuces on the ninth and thirteenth. Standing in the trap to the left of the ninth green, Sarazen hole out a spectacular 50-foot explosion shot that brought a thundering cheer from a crowd of 4,000.

Playing with Sarazen before the largest opening crowd in the history of the event, little Paul Runyan knitted together a brace of 37's for a 74 to find himself emeshed in a deadlock for fourth place with seven other prominent golfers. These included Horton Smith, the Joplin ghost, Jimmy Thompsou, the powerful California ice shot artist, George Von Elm, Long Beach, (N. Y.) Prussian, who lost ti Billy Burke in the marathon overtime battle of 1931; Willie Gogging, of San Francisco, National P. G. A. runner-up; Mortie Dutra, Royal Oak, Mich.; Henry Cuici, Flushing, N. Y., and Rodney Bliss, youthful Nebraskan who was runner-up for the Western amateur last year.

Muffs Two-footer.

Fate was unkind to Paul Runyan on the tricky home green. He needed a 4 to match Sarazen's score, but as was the case with Lacey, he muffed a 2-footer, where only a minute before it appeared that he had saved hmself a few strokes with a deadly shot out of the trap.

Johnny Goodman, cocky defending champion, was five shots from the day's pace setters, but his 76 was comfortable enough to cause him to remark that he thought he would be several shots lower, come tomorrow.

Goodman was in company with a flock of other 76 shooters, including the carefree Walter Hagen, who hasn't won the open since that memorable day in 1919 when he beat out Mik Brady for the title at Brae Burn; Ky Laffon, the sensational favorite from Denver; Olin Dutra, the 200-pound "gay caballero" from the Coast, and Billy Burke, former open champion.

Draws Large Gallery.

Until Sarazen and Runyan started firing away early in the afternoon, Hagen, playing with Cox, drew the largest gallery. It might be well to remember that even if the Haig had been shooting sixes and sevens, he would still have the gallery with him. Today, that miraculous comeback demon of golf clouted two shots out of bounds on the sixth hole to taxe a 7. He used up 40 strokes on the first nine and played the homeward journey in 36 as only a Hagen can do.

Many a National star late today left the course broken hearted. None was quite so disappointed as W. Lawson Little, the 23-year-old Stanford student, par wrecker of old Prestwick, and winner only recently of the British amateur championship. Little scored an 83, with a depressing 8 on the ferocious 595-yard fourth. The trouble started, it seems, when young Mr. Little cracked his pet driver on the second hole.

Tigers Trim Tribe, Add To Lead

Win, 11-6, Take Series; Rally in Seventh to Rout Hildebrand.

DETROIT, June 7 (AP).—The Detroit Tigers continued their role as pacemakers of the American League today by defeating the Cleveland Indians, 11 to 6, in the final game of the series.

The victory gave the Tigers three out of four games for the series and a more secure position at the top of the league standings. Boston and New York were idle because of cold weather.

The Tigers had to come from behind to take the series final, Cleveland holding the lead for the first six innings.

Tommy Bridges pitched the entire game for Detroit, allowing 12 hits. The Tigers got 10 hits off Hildebrand, Brown and Winegarner. Ten passes handed out to Detroit batsmen helped materially in the victory.

Going into the seventh inning, the Tigers scored two runs to take the lead and drive Hildebrand to the showers. Cochrane walked and took second on Goslin's infield out, Gehringer singled to score Cochrane and then Lloyd Brown went in for Hildebrand. Rogell grounded out and Greenberg and Walker drew passes, whereupon Owen singled to bring in Gehringer.

A six-run spurt in the eighth padded out the Tiger margin, the attack being featured by three passes, a double, two singles and an error by Trosky. The latter missed a throw to first and two Tigers crossed the home plate.

The Indians put on a futile two-run rally in the ninth, Winegarner and Rice singling with one out, and then coming in on Averill's one-bagger.

Middleburg's Champion Is Bon Diable

Whitney Horse Is Judged Best; Big Crowd Sees Second Day Card.

MIDDLEBURG, Va., June 7 (Spl.).—Bon Diable, splendid gray gelding belonging to Mrs. John Hay Whitney, of Upperville, was judged the champion hunter at the twelfth annual Middleburg horse show and races, which came to a close today after a successful two-day event held for the benefit of the Middleburg Community League. Benton Stables' Mother Sills won the reserve ribbon.

Bon Diable twice captured the silver horse statuette, trophy presented by Miss Mallory Davis in the colorful Corinthian class, winning for Mrs. Whitney two legs on the trophy. Previous winners have been Arthur White and Benton Stables.

Competition was keen this afternoon between the hunters of Mrs. Whitney's Llangollen Stables and the Benton Stables' entries, both taking a large number of ribbons. The weather was ideal for a horse show and Loudoun County's representative horse folk were in large attendance today.

In the first race of the afternoon, which was a 2-mile brush race, only two horses started, Jack Skinner's

Line Coach at Duke Shoots 333-Yard Ace

Durham, N. C., June 7 (AP).—Ellis (Dumpy) Hagler, line coach at Duke University, today held membership in the select class of golfers who have made a hole-in-one on a par four hole.

The former University of Alabama gridiron star smashed a tremendous tee shot on the 333-yard seventh hole at the Hope Valley links yesterday and it trickled into the cup.

Foxx Pounds 14th Homer Of Season

Figures in All of Runs Scored by Athletics in Series Finals.

Whitehill Gives 6 Hits; Error Aids Washington in Five-Run 6th.

By Shirley L. Povich
(Sports Editor of The Post).

DAVE HARRIS, broad of chest and mighty of arm, who feeds all the little Harrises by the power of his bat, swaggered to the plate in a pinch-hitting role at Griffith Stadium yesterday when matters were exceedingly in doubt, and Washington forthwith won a ball game.

There were other hits and other runs during that ball game, but the result was still very much in abeyance in the sixth inning, when, with the score tied, the bases full and the need of a pinch-hitter apparent, Manager Joe Cronin's roving eye fell on the form of doughty Dave, whose itching fingers were already fingering a bat in the Nats' dugout.

Dave got the assignment, fouled off a couple of strikes, and then banged a two-base hit that flew past Third Baseman Higgins like a bat out of the nether regions, three runners scored and the Nats then and there beat the Athletics. The final score was 7 to 3.

Foxx Hits Homer.

Only the brawny form of James Emory Foxx, the apple-cheeked former ploughboy from Maryland's Eastern Shore, who figured in all three Athletic runs, stood between Earl Whitehill and another shutout victory. Whitehill, who gave only six hits all day, was riding the crest of a skimpy 1-to-0 lead in the sixth when he issued a walk to Roger Cramer and then flung a pitch at Foxx. That pitch never reached the plate. Foxx bounced it into the left center field bleachers on a low trajectory for his fourteenth home run of the season, and Washington was trailing, 2 to 1.

Young Johnny Cain, meanwhile, had turned back the Nats with only three hits for five innings, before Washington began its reply to the two-run sally of the A's in the sixth.

Dixie Bee Gallops to Easy Victory in 5-Furlong Feature Race at Charles Town

Worthington Defeated by 6 Lengths

Palumbo Gets Daughter of Carlaris Away, Is Never Headed.

Daily Double of $278 Paid as Busy Ike Wins in Upset.

By Walter Haight
(Post Staff Correspondent).

CHARLES TOWN, June 7.—The stewards cracked the whip here in the mountains today. Old Eddie Ambrose, who helped the E. B. McLean Stable lead the Nation in money won in 1929, was first to be disciplined. He was suspended pending an investigation of his ride on Hackey H., which finished second in the first race after leading most of the way. The fourth race brought ten days of idleness to Jockey R. Holland for rough riding aboard Sea Finn, the winner, but there was no mention of disqualification of the horse.

The day's feature race was annexed by Dixie Bee, a previous winner at this course, and she made a thorough job of getting home first. In fact, six lengths separated her from Worthington, which, in turn, had a length and a half advantage over Sun Alley.

Rushed to Front.

The race did not even smack of a contest. Sam Palumbo had the mount on Dixie Bee and rushed his charge to the front as the field left on the 5-furlong sprint. Sun Alley made a game effort to keep up, but Dixie Bee burnt oil out in front. Competition developed into the battle for second honors, which Worthington won.

Dixie Bee was installed the public choice at even money.

The daily double provided a boxcar numbers mutuel of $278.50, because Busy Ike was on the pay-off end of the parlay betting. Busy Ike, a former half-mile-track star, had shown little heretofore this year, but awoke with a bang today at an $85 mutuel. Most Always was on the front end of the double.

Regardless of Stock Run, Lawrence Rivers, Inc., Will Present New Play July 9

Play by Foote Will Be Given Local Tryout

Jean Dixon and Shepperd Strudwick Will Head Excellent Cast.

(Reprinted from Yesterday's Last Edition.)
By Nelson B. Bell.

It will be important to the habitual theatergoer to know that whether the National Theater Players terminate their spring and early summer season at the National Theater this Saturday night or not, there still will be a "first time on any stage" in the famous old E street house the week of Monday, July 9.

This will be the Rowland Stebbins prdouction of "Tight Britches," a play of the North Carolina mountains written by John Taintor Foote. Rowland Stebbins, as goes without saying, is the gentleman who masquerades as "Lawrence Rivers, Inc." and puts on such inconsequential things as "The Green Pastures," the Marc Connelly fable of the Old Testament that bids fair to run as long as its cast survives.

Following a protracted tour of the major communities craving theatrical diversion in the Old Dominion, Mr. William Fields, an able publicist known to the talent as "Bill," recently found it expedient to drop off in Washington long enough to plant the idea that "Tight Britches" would be a midsummer experiment of his boss' just by way of seeing what might be expected of the Foote drama come the serious days of fall production.

Strudwick to Return.

When the new play is offered here on July 9, the principal roles will be played by Jean Dixon and Sheppherd Strudwick, the latter a young man who did fine work with Ina Claire in "Biography," an amusing whimsy by S. N. Behrman, and later was not half so importantly cast in the Theater Guild's production of "Jig Saw," the comedy by Dawn Powell, that opened here and went on to New York, directly, to beguile the hot weather addicts of slightly risque humor along Broadway.

It is perhaps worthy of note that Mr. Fields, of whom you will hear much more now that "Tight Britches" seems imminent as an occasion for his vocalism, while he was in Virginia booked "The Green Pastures" into every opera house, tabernacle, town hall and tent the State has to offer. "The Green Pastures," in short, will cover our neighbor State like a blanket once the new season's tour gets under way.

That is the kind of prodigious young fellow Mr. Fields is.

A card from Mr. and Mrs. Lou Brown, he being the principal mouthpiece of the Loew interests in the National Capital, brings discomforting tidings that they are having a perfectly ventilated and elegant time down at Virginia Beach. For the which, I trust the jellyfish will sting them plenty when they venture into that surf. That would be speaking as one serf to another, as you might say!

Players Are Honored.

The Washington Community Players are feeling just a little puffed up. Having achieved no end of local fame by having produced, in the first year of their professional existence, both Lewis Carroll's "Alice in Wonderland' "and Robert Louis Stevenson's "Treasure Island," to the vast enthusiasm of large audiences for both productions, this talented acting group has received telegraphic request to appear in both plays at Charleston, W. Va., on June 16, at the annual State Day celebration.

Bess Davis Schreiner, assisted by George Farrington, is busily engaged in trying to reassemble the casts for both plays to take advantage of the flattering offer that has come to them.

The Community Players, by the way, are engaged in preparing two plays to be given this summer in the National Sylvan Theater on the Monument Grounds. One is Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream," the other a pantomimic version of "Ali Baba, or the Cave of the Forty Thieves."

A permanent wooden cyclorama, painted sky-blue and serving the double purpose of sky background and sounding-board, has been installed as a feature of the Roadside Theater, located six miles from the Capital out on the Rockville Pike, which is to open with a production of Dion Boucicault's "The Octoroon" on June 19. That is to say, the Roadside Theater is to open, not the Rockville Pike. The usual beaverboard or plaster cyclorama was abandoned in favor of the new device, which, it is believed, is the only one in the country of precisely its type. Not that it matters.

Stock Troupe Feted.

On Saturday evening of the current week, Mr. and Mrs. Abner Drury, 2315 Bancroft place northwest, are entertaining in honor of the National Theater Players, Mr. Stephen E. Cochran, impresario.

Mr. and Mrs. Drury have graciously included in their invitation list such of the dramatic desks as find it possible to attend social soirees of this sort on the last day of the week—which, it is hoped, will prove to include this habitual typewriter.

The National Theater Players are very splendid people with whom it always is a pleasure to consort. Otherwise, I never should have become apprised of the fact that Kathryn Givney is my twin, barring the trivial matter of the respective years of our birth.

The day of the month is the same, at any rate, which really is all that matters since we both are Scorpios, along with the late President Theodore Roosevelt and a few more born on October 27.

But guess the year—that is the hard part!

Congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. Carter Barron—he would be City Manager of the Loew interests in Washington and she would be "Chic"—upon the celebration of their sixth wedding anniversary. And to Master Carter Tait Barron, jr., who has attained the ripe old age of 6 months and probably doesn't quite comprehend what the shooting is all about. Mr. and Mrs. Barron, as I understand it, were school-day sweethearts and were married in Atlanta, Ga., immediately following his graduation from Georgia Tech. A couple of grand young people, who, during their two years of residence in this city have made a host of friends. They probably all conveyed some such congratulations as these yesterday when they really were due, June 6 having been the important date.

More Meteorology.

Nice Departmental showers we had after the rain yesterday, don't you think?

Crisfield Mayor Wins Third Term

Crisfield, Md., June 7 (Spl.).—Voters of Crisfield went to the polls yesterday and expressed their approval of the present administration by reelecting William H. Bradshaw as mayor, the office he already has held for two terms. Bradshaw polled a vote of 682, while his opponent, E. R. Frank Tyler, registered 236.

Raymond K. Woodland, present member of the city council, was reelected to that office. Benjamin F. Gibson, other member of the council whose term expired, was defeated by Simmons P. Tilghman. A total of 960 votes was cast. Other candidates for the council were Charles C. Byrd, Charles H. Mallison and Carlyle A. Riggin.

"Ladies' Night" Planned.

Westminster, Md., June 7 (Spl.). Invitations have been issued by Charity Lodge, No. 58, Knights of Pythias, Westminster, for "ladies' night" in the Armory Tuesday evening, June 19. There will be entertainment, dancing and refreshments.

At right is Margaret Sullavan, who scored so emphatically in "Only Yesterday" and now bids fair to duplicate that performance in "Little Man What Now?" the Universal production opening at the Earle tomorrow.

Charlie Chaplin About Decides to Talk in His Next; Irvin S. Cobb Enjoys Stay on West Coast; Up and Down the Boulevard.

By Grace Kingsley.

Hollywood, June 6.—Charlie Chaplin may talk in his next picture! It is known that he is flirting with the idea.

CHARLES CHAPLIN

His notion for at least a part of the talk is unique. If you have heard Chaplin at parties, kidding around, imitating various languages, you will realize how effectively the idea might be introduced into a comedy.

Chaplin has a smattering of French and Spanish, but it is not the real French and Spanish which he uses in his imitations, but purely a jargon, which sounds like these languages. And he has a gift of tongues so far as these imitations go, since he can speak a multitude of jargons, including Chinese and Turkish.

If he uses this device in his comedy, he will introduce these synthetic tongues in Ellis Island scenes, speaking a different language to each person he meets.

He fears, however, that this would be good only for a reel or two. But, ultimately, we feel sure that this greatest of all comedians will work out something by which his voice will be heard, although doubtless pure pantomime will never fail of world-wide response so long as it is Charlie's.

Irvin S. Cobb Notes.

Irvin S. Cobb's story, "Balm of Gilead," may become a picture. One of the major studios is dickering for it. In the meantime, Cobb is having a good time here in the West, writing for Hal Roach. His first picture for that organization, "Speaking of Relations," starring no less a person than himself, is ready for preview.

"Hollywood parties have changed since I was here last," he stated jovially. "They are now all elegant simplicity, like Nero's. I have gone to only a few small parties, though—where the people wouldn't lose social caste by inviting a mere writer."

Cobb told about being at a dinner party at Frank Craven's house, where the guests were all humorists.

"But we got to singing the old songs together, and all of us supposed comics were crying before we got through."

Speaking of jokes on certain picture producers, Cobb said, "Everybody picks on the magnates, but why deosn't somebody pick on some of the funny people who are acting?"

What to Enjoy In Playhouses With New Week

Amusements Narrow Down to Pictures and Open Air Resorts.

(Reprinted from Yesterday's Last Edition.)

As this is written the future of the "little season" of the National Theater Players is in the lap of the gods. With a reasonable "break" in the weather and a little more kindly disposition on the part of our old and perverse friend, Jupiter Pluvius, "Sailor, Beware" stands an excellent chance of progressing through a second week of E street hilarity. If, on the other hand, thunderstorms persist in coming up at exactly the hour of the best normal box-office sales, there is a high probability that the National will close on Saturday night. Such a contingency would write a definite finis to the legitimate theater until September, save for the single week of July 9, when Lawrence Rivers, Inc., has it in mind to try out a new play, "Tight Britches," at the National.

There will still remain, however, the seasonable pastimes to be found at the al fresco parks. Glen Echo, with the Crystal Pool in complete operation, at reduced prices, but with increased service, affords no end of popular entertainment. With its something in excess of 55 amusement devices—if we have our figures on straight—Glen Echo provides something for every taste. Among its most popular items are the nightly dancing, except Sunday, in the Spanish Garden ballroom, to the sprightly rhythms of the Mac-Williams Orchestra, and the picnic facilities that are provided gratis for family parties.

• • • •

Scarcely less is offered a little farther away at Seaside Park, down at Chesapeake Beach, on the bay. Here new improvements have added greatly to the attractiveness of a play place that always has been a favorite with Washington amusement seekers. Here there is salt—or at least, brackish—water to splash around in, all of the familiar water sports, so much desired at this time of year, and a pier that gives an added thrill to the landlubber who likes water without getting his feet wet. Seaside Park also boasts a large swimming pool, nightly dancing and all of the picnic facilities that possibly could be desired.

Among the surviving motion picture establishments—and practically all are, with the single exception of the Rialto—Loew's Palace for the week beginning tomorrow will present Joan Crawford in the long-awaited "Sadie McKee," a Vina Delmar story, in which she is supported by Franchot Tone, Esther Ralston, Gene Raymond and a considerable number of other players of the first rank. The supplementary bill will embrace a judicious selection of short-reel subjects, led by a clever comedy and the Metrotone News.

• • • •

One of the most talked-of books of the past year, and a best seller for a great deal of the time, will be displayed in cinematographic form on the screen at the Earle Theater for the week beginning tomorrow, when "Little Man, What Now?" will be the chief feature of the bill. In this subject the principal roles will be played by Margaret Sullavan, who recently scored so decisively in "Only Yesterday," and Douglass Montgomery, the young man who made so favorable an impression with Katharine Hepburn in "Little Women." On the stage, Gracie Barrie will continue a second and final week as mistress of ceremonies and songstress, with Dick and Edith Barstow, Harry and Frances Usher, Paul Remos and his Toy Boys, and, as an extra added attraction, Joe Termini, to complete the vaudeville roster. Short reels and Freddie Clark's Orchestra, as usual.

• • • •

Clive Brook and Diana Wynyard, stars of Noel Coward's "Cavalcade," by the way, have scored so soundly at RKO-Keith's that they will be retained in "Where Sinners Meet," a film version of A. A. Milne's "The Dover Road," through Saturday. With another inaugural announced for Sunday, the Fifteenth street house will offer as its new screen feature the talking version of Deeping's "Sorrell and Son," with H. B. Warner once more appearing in the role in which he achieved so fine a hit in the silent version. Hugh Williams will appear in the foremost supporting role. The bill, of course, will be completed by abbreviated camera subjects, including the RKO News of the World.

• • • •

"Thirty Day Princess," a breezy comedy-romance in which the pivotal roles are played by Sylvia Sidney and Cary Grant, will be the major screen attraction at Loew's Fox Theater for the week beginning tomorrow. Among the supporting players in this subject will be seen Edward Arnold, former leading man of the National Theater Players. On the stage, Benny Davis will come to bat with his latest aggregation of juvenile stars, destined for future greatness on Broadway. Mr. Davis makes very few mistakes in his selection of talent for these juvenile revues of his. The bill will be completed by the customary short-reel screen subjects and Prof. Lampkin's tuneful overture.

Gladys Hasty Carroll's placid narrative of the passing of the seasons on a tranquil New England farm will occupy the screen at the Metropolitan Theater for the week beginning tomorrow, when "As The Earth Turns," a Warner Brothers production, will be shown for the first time in Washington with Donald Woods, another former leading man of the National Theater Players, and Jean Muir, a new Warner beauty, in the costellar roles. The two-and-a-half-hour program will be completed by a long list of subsidiary attractions, including a musical subject, "Story Conference," starring Lillian Roth, and a full fifteen-minute newsreel.

• • • •

Augustus Thomas' thrilling drama of "The Witching Hour" will be shown for the first time locally as chief feature of the new week's bill at Loew's Columbia Theater, beginning tomorrow. Sir Guy Standing, John Halliday and Judith Allen are the foremost members of the cast. The story of the play is an absorbing one of the power of mind over matter and develops numerous climaxes of poignancy and power. Short-reel subjects and a new issue of the Paramount Sound News will complete the program.

• • • •

For the third week of its new policy, the Gayety Theater, having abandoned burlesue until next fall, will offer another sensational screen attraction, to be presented before segregated audiences.

Stocks Drift Lower in Spite Of Firm Metals

Movements Are Mixed as Transfers Shrink to 467,150 Shares.

New York, June 7 (AP).—Metal shares played a lone hand in moving counter to a slow downward drift in the stock market today.

Unable to get through the tops of the narrow range it has occupied the last three weeks, the market reverted to idleness. Movements were mixed and restricted in range, the average price of 90 stocks closing three-tenths of a point lower at 77.1.

What little speculative activity there was centered on metals, oils and sugars. Scattered issues also received some attention, but the usual leaders retired to the background.

List of Uncertainties.

Uncertainties of labor unrest, the summer business outlook and impending Federal regulation of exchanges were considered too great to justify broad renewal of bullish activities. Concern over a steel strike threat increased.

Liquidation was small, however. As the market backed away from yesterday's tops, sales on the Stock Exchange shrank to 467,150 shares, against 665,900 in the preceding session.

Gains of fractions to nearly 3 points were scored by the more active metal shares, including American Smelting, U. S. Smelting, McIntyre Porcupine, Cerro De Pasco and Howe Sound. Dome Mines crossed 42 to a new peak since it was listed in 1932.

Homestake Mining, leading domestic gold producer, leaped 14 points on transfer of 200 shares to a price of 380. As a group, gold shares were near top prices attained this year.

Speculative Interest Aided.

Anticipation of passage of the silver bill in the Senate, recurrence of inflationary rumors and talk of the possibility of another step-up in the domestic price of gold all helped to keep speculative interest in metals alive.

Fractional losses outnumbered small gains for such issues as U. S. Steel, Bethlehem Steel, American Can, General Motors, Electric Autolite, Consolidated Gas, American Telephone, Santa Fe, New York Central and General Electric.

Elsewhere strength in domestic Government bonds and a brisk rally in the German mark attracted most attention.

Oils Expand Gains.

Standard Oils of New Jersey and California, Atlantic Refining, Continental and other petroleum shares expanded gains in the previous session fractionally to more than a point. Amerada touched a new 1934 peak.

Other strong spots were Scott Paper, up 4 points at the finish, J. I. Case, Columbia Gas & Electric $5 preferred and International Business Machines.

A rise of $82,000,000 in brokers' loans, making the total $997,000,000, featured weekly Federal Reserve Banking statistics. The increase was attributed to demand for funds in connection with Treasury financing, for the stock market was inactive during the week.

Monetary gold stocks showed a further gain of $14,000,000 to $7,790,000,000. Money in circulation increased $4,000,000 to $5,342,000,000 but was $138,000,000 under the total a year ago. Member bank reserves balances expanded $24,000,000.

Robey's Review

Finance Economics Business

Advice John Maynard Keynes Probably Gave the President Is Clear if One Assumes the Doctor Still Holds His Old Theory.

By Ralph West Robey.

John Maynard Keynes, the English economist, has such a reputation as a New Deal monetary theorist that it was almost certain that sooner or later his current visit to this country would start all kinds of stories as to the spectacular advice he has given the Administration. Some of the rumors, such as the one that he recommended a further devaluation of the dollar, are almost fantastic. We may be sure, nevertheless, that in his long conference with President Roosevelt he was not backward about expressing his views. Further, that these views were advanced with a dogmatism worthy of the author of "Essays in Persuasion." For whatever one may think of Dr. Keynes as an economist, it must be granted that he is not lacking in assurance as to the policies he sponsors.

Granting Dr. Keynes has not changed his whole theory of money, credit and prices, however, there would appear to be relatively little room for wondering about the general tone of his advice. This is because his theory is sufficiently clear-cut in its basic elements that it does not lend itself to major variations in practical operation. If he has held to his theory, therefore, one can be about as positive in drawing conclusions as one could be, for example, if he were discussing the thesis of Prof. Warren or Prof. Fisher.

Keynes May Be Classed as A "Modernized" Quantity Theorist.

First of the points to recognize in analyzing the theory of Dr. Keynes is that he is, to use a term now common in monetary discussions, a "modernized" quantity theorist. He believes that the volume of purchasing power is directly related to prices, but he differs from the old quantity theorist, such as Fisher, in that he does not hold the relation is rigid. In other words, whereas Fisher and his followers maintain that an increase of 10 per cent in the volume of purchasing power will cause, other things being equal, a proportionate change in prices, Dr. Keynes insists that the proportionate relationship may not hold true. Rather, according to him, the effect upon prices will depend upon the use to which the purchasing power is put.

To state this a little more accurately, one may say Dr. Keynes thinks that if the purchasing power is used to buy consumption goods, other things will not remain equal because the increased demand almost immediately will result in increased production. Such increased production, accordingly, will offset the enlargement of purchasing power and consequently there will be no increase of prices. Fisher does not accept such a necessary casual result.

On the other hand, if the increased purchasing power is used for production goods—the building of factories, road construction, &c.—no greater volume of goods is thrown on the market. We get, then, a net addition to the volume of purchasing power in relation to the volume of goods being offered in the market. The result is a rise of prices.

Theory Indicates Method For Regulating Prices.

From such a thesis, and needless to say it is a gross oversimplification of Dr. Keynes' own presentation of his theory, it is evident how one must direct expenditures in order to get a given result. If we want higher prices, we should spend in those ways that will not result in an increased supply of goods coming on the market. If, on the contrary, we merely want to increase the volume of business activity, but do not want to raise prices, we should pump funds into the economic system in such a manner that they will be used for consumption goods.

Turning directly to our own field, therefore, one may say that Dr. Keynes would hold that a heavy expenditure through a building program would raise prices, while a removal of CWA would increase business activity but would not raise prices. One would expect, therefore, that in his talk with President Roosevelt he would urge a spending program, but would vary the specific advice as to what kind of a spending program it should be according to what it was indicated to him it is desired to accomplish—whether we want increased employment and higher prices or merely greater business activity and relative price stability.

Bond Market Holds Steady AndUnchanged

Treasury 3⅜s Driven Up to New Highs; Sales, $10,382,000.

New York, June 7 (AP).—The best that could be said of the bond market today was that prices were fairly steady and prime investment issues showed further quiet firming tendencies.

On the whole, trading was listless and trends were difficult to discover. Transfers totaled $10,382,000, par value, against $12,521,000 in the previous session, and the average for 60 domestic corporate loans was unchanged at 85.8.

The market, while viewing with some concern the threatened strike in the steel industry and other labor unsettlement, was cheered by the announcement that the new U. S. Treasury bonds and notes had been oversubscribed by some $7,000,000,000. Some bankers saw indications that the Government was considering a huge refunding operation this fall and believed that the recent $800,000,000 offering was in the nature of a "test" preparatory to the mapping out of a large conversion program.

Federals Fairly Active.

Transactions in listed Federal securities were fairly active. Of a turnover of about $2,500,000, however, the Treasury 3¼s of 1944-46 accounted for $1,046,000.

This issue showed a gain of 1-32d of a point. All of the Treasury 3⅜s edged up to new highs for the year, as did the 3¼s of 1941.

In the corporate division several loans crept through their old highs for 1933. Among these were Union Pacific 4½'s of 1967, Chesapeake & Ohio refunding 4½'s of both series and Long Island refunding 4's.

Gains of Fractions.

Gains of fractions to a point or more were held by some bonds of Boston & Maine, Certain-teed, Burlington, Cleveland Union Terminal, Columbia Gas, Consolidated Gas, Great Northern, Interborough Rapid Transit, International Hydro-Electric, Louisville & Nashville, National Dairy, Nickel Plate, Northern Pacific, Pennsylvania, St. Louis Southwestern, and Vanadium. Otis Steel 6's drew a sizeable following for a gain of 6¼ points.

Among the losers were loans of Western Union, Studebaker, Southern Railway, Postal Telegraph, Northern Pacific, New York Central, Chicago & Northwestern, St. Paul, Baltimore & Ohio and Alleghany Corporation.

In the foreign section German obligations steadied. While most of the Argentines were a trifle easier, Santa Fe's advanced 5⅛ points. Cordoba City 7's also gained 3. Bonds of Cuba, Poland and Rhine Westphalia were heavy.

Curb's Prices Change Little In Dull Session

Metals Close Firmer as Sales Turnover Drops to 130,000 Shares.

New York, June 7 (AP).—Negligible price changes were recorded in listless curb market dealings today. Metals closed a bit firmer in sympathy with an active demand for that group on the big board. A few oil shares firmed.

Some scattered recessions occurred. Swift International dipped nearly a point under active offerings while Greyhound Corporation and American Gas & Electric yielded fractionally.

Ford of Canada B rose nearly 3 points in a small buying flurry and Hiram Walker more than recovered the previous day's loss. Gulf Oil continued its upward trend to 64¼, up 1¼.

Lake Shore and Newmont Mining gained more than a point apiece. Wright Hargreaves, Teck Hughes and Pioneer Gold, although active, showed only scant improvement.

Transfers, which approximated 130,000 shares, were slightly under yesterday's total.

Wheat Tumbles 1⅛ Cents as Drought Ends

Report of Widespread Rain Causes Reaction; Corn Continues Gain.

Chicago, June 7 (AP).—Tumbles of nearly 3 cents a bushel maximum in wheat prices today accompanied practical ending of drought in the Dakotas, Minnesota and Montana.

Much of the selling witnessed in the wheat market was against enlarged speculative buying of corn. The corn buying was based a good deal on expectance of increased demand for corn because of shortage of other feed grains, and as a result of apparent likelihood the Government would make big purchases of corn for drought relief.

Wheat closed nervous at about 1 cent rally from the day's bottom level, but 1⅛ to 1⅞ under yesterday's finish; corn, ⅜ to 1 cent advanced; oats, ⅛ to ⅞ down, and provisions unchanged to 5 cents up.

Reports of Rain.

Virtually the entire list of United States Weather Bureau Stations in the four chief spring wheat States reported rains today, and from the outset this fact dominated the wheat trade.

Price rallies in wheat were numerous, but at no time fully overcame losses, notwithstanding that drought and high temperatures continued in Southwestern States and caused reports of premature ripening of the winter crop.

A steadying influence of downturns of quotations, however, was prospects that the United States Government crop report tomorrow would more than confirm recent unofficial estimates of big crop damage both in spring and winter wheat.

Cause of Upturns.

About the best of the transient upturns of wheat prices today followed an official forecast indicating that moisture tonight and tomorrow would as a rule be confined to showers. Something of a counterbalance to the temporary rallying trend was word from Liverpool that Argentine shipments of wheat were larger than expected, and were now in excess of the quota which Argentina had agreed to. Another weight on wheat values was announcement that the harvest movement of 1934 domestic winter wheat was increasing—notably that 11 cars of new wheat arrived today at Enid, Okla.

A feature of the corn market was sharp attention given to reports of probable future heavy damage to corn crops by chinch bugs throughout important corn areas. Oats followed wheat rather than corn.

Provisions developed late firmness, responsive to corn strength and to hog market upturns.

Rubber Trade Failures Fall To New Low

New York, June 7.—The sharp reduction in failures, which started in July, 1933, practically has freed the industry of bankruptcies. For the first four months of the current year no failures were recorded for manufacturers of rubber and in the distributive branch only one default occurred, with liabilities of $16,492. This continues the downtrend of 1933, when the number of failures was cut exactly in half, as there was a total of 13, as compared with 26 in 1932.

The defaulted indebtedness of the bankrupt firms shrank by an even wider degree, as the total of $208,856 ocmpared with $1,438,683 in 1932, a decrease of 85.5 per cent. In 1931 the liabilities reached an all-time high of $1,749,970, making a reduction of 88.0 per cent in the comparison with the 1933 figures.

The complete insolvency record of the rubber goods industry since 1927, including the first four months of 1934, as compiled by Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., shows:

Greece's Naval Stores Exports are Increased

Production and exports of naval stores by Greece during the first quarter of 1934 were the highest recorded in any previous three-month period, according to a report to the Commerce Department from Commercial Attache K. L. Rankin, Athens.

Heavy purchases of gum rosin, estimated at nearly 2,000 metric tons, it is pointed out, were effected by Greek importers of coffee for shipment to Brazil under the terms of the Greco-Brazilian barter agreement. Actual exports of gum rosin to Brazil during the January-March quarter totaled 3,264,380 pounds, valued at 7,348,000 drachmas, or about $66,000 at average rates of exchange. It is doubtful, however, Rankin states, whether the Brazilian market will continue to absorb large quantities of Greek rosin, chiefly because the quality is considered locally to be inferior to that supplied by the United States.

Wholesalers Extend Gains In Business

Reorders and Mail Sales Make Up Bulk of Trade Expansion.

New York, June 7.—The moderate upswing noted in the activity of wholesale markets early this week, according to Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., has been extended.

Most of the volume, however, has been contributed by reorders and mail requests, as many of the buyers postponed their trips until next week. Buying of dresses in both silk and cotton made more progress than in the last four weeks, with particular emphasis being placed on prints and white in light sheers.

White coats, millinery, shoes, vacation apparel, and leather goods added substantially to the volume, while in the men's division sport clothing, duo-toned shoes, and swim suits made the best showing. Orders for furs are reaching noteworthy proportions, with garments for August promotions being chosen in higher-priced brackets than last year. Due to the present firmness of the raw fur market, which presages substantial rises in the fall, August fur sales are expected to receive the best patronage in the last four years.

Buying for Autumn Gains.

Buying for fall needs is gaining momentum, as retailers have been brought to a realization that disappointments will be suffered unless early commitments are placed, due to the longer period now required for the manufacture under the present code rulings relating to working hours.

In addition, prices are more stable than they were a month ago, and sizable advances are in prospect for many grades of merchandise in September, as determination seems general to align production closely to distributors' needs.

While the resistance of consumers to present prices is reported at scattered points, this has been overemphasized, for mark-downs in these same districts have not resulted in any perceptible increase in buying. As a rule, both wholesalers and retailers have endeavored to hold mark-ups to a small precentage, in order to bring goods within the reach of the widest range of buyers.

Dry Goods Active.

Wholesale dry goods markets have turned more active, and the outlook for substanial gains in fall business is more definite than a month ago.

The steady increase in consumer buying power, as compared with what it was a year ago, is reducing retailers' holdings of both staple and fancy goods. While many orders are being delayed because of the sagging prices of most textile goods, resulting in narrowed profits, any widening of demand soon would remove this handicap.

The call for rayon goods has become stronger, following the price reduction last week, and wool goods are receiving more attention now, bringing to an end a slump which has lasted for nearly three months. The demand for towels has commenced to broaden, and more inquiries are being received for blankets and bedspreads. Little interest, however, is being taken in sheets and pillowcases.

ats Trounce Mackmen by 7-3 Count

Harris' Double in Pinch Drives in Three Runs to Decide.

Manush Is Hit.

With Cain holding them to three hits and the Nats never having won a ladies day game this season, matters looked dark, indeed, for Washington until Cain opened that sixth by pinking Heinie Manush on the shoulder with a pitch. Then developments followed thick and fast. Eric McNair muffed Cronin's grounder with a double play in sight, and Manush moved to third when Stone forced Cronin at second.

The same Travis, who had given the Nats a lead back in the second inning then gave them a tie score with a single into right field that scored Manush, and when Schulte walked, the bases were loaded.

Bats for Phillips.

Then it was that Cronin signaled for Dave Harris to bat for Phillips, with three base-runners awaiting licenses to gallop. It came in the form of a slashing two-bagger past Higgins out into left field and the 2-2 tie leaped to proportions of a 5-2 lead for Washington; Buddy Myer scored Harris with a single and it was 6-2.

The Nats tacked on another run for Whitehill in the seventh, although the temperamental Washington southpaw was doing very well for himself, having held the A's to five hits to that point. Manush's single, a passed ball by Hayes and Stone's smack into right field accounted for that seventh run, and that triple by McNair that scored Foxx for the A's in the eighth served only to prolong the contest.

Browns' Three Tallies ... 9th Beat Chisox, 5-3

Chicago, June 7 (AP).—A three-run St. Louis rally in the ninth inning erased the effects of Zeke Bonura's fifteenth home run today and the Browns took the final game of the series from the White Sox, 5 to 3. The rally also gave them the set, three games to one.

A triple by Ray Pepper climaxed the rally and scored Sam West and Jack Burns with the winning margin. Bruce Campbell opened the ninth with a pinch single. He took third on a sacrifice and Milt Gaston's wild pitch and scored the tying run on West's single. Burns then drew a pass to set the stage for Pepper.

Bonura's homer that opened the sixth gave the Sox a 3-to-2 lead.

Dodgers Triumph, 1-0, On Home Run in First

Philadelphia, June 7 (AP).—Len Koenecke, the first Dodger to come to bat, walloped a home run today that enabled Brooklyn to salvage the final game of the series with a 1-to-0 decision over the Phillies.

After that George Darrow limited the Dodgers to three more hits, pitching hitless ball from the third inning to the ninth, but the Phils couldn't get a run out of seven hits off Emil (Dutch) Leonard. The young Brooklyn hurler allowed two hits in only one inning, fanned six and was aided by smart infield work.

Koenecke retired after the third inning because of a lame leg.

Reds Rookie Hurls Well, but Bucs Win

Pirates Score, 2-1, as Traynor's Triple Decides.

Cincinnati, June 7 (AP).—Young Ted Kleinhans pitched a tight game for the Cincinnati Reds today, but "Red" Lucas shaded him nevertheless and the Pittsburgh Pirates won again, 2 to 1.

The rookie, making his second start for the Reds, granted seven hits. Only one was for extra bases, but that, Traynor's triple in the seventh, scored Paul Waner with the winning run. Lucas, meanwhile, held the Reds to a scant four blows.

Defeat Drops Cards From First to Fourth.

St. Louis, June 7 (AP).—Big Jim Weaver, recently picked up by the Cubs when the Browns turned him back to Newark, pitched shutout ball today as Chicago won the series final from the Cardinals, 1 to 0, and made it two out of three for the series.

The Cubs, by winning yesterday and today, dropped the Cardinals from first to fourth position in the league standings, behind New York, Chicago and Pittsburgh.

The Cubs scored the only run of the game in the third inning. Billy Herman opened with a single and advanced to third on infield outs by English and Klein. Babe Herman's single brought him home.

Late Rallies Net Giants 14-5 Triumph

Score 13 Runs in Sixth and Seventh to Sweep Series With Boston Braves.

NEW YORK, June 7 (AP).—After nearly "blowing" a game through Fred Fitzsimmons' liberality in hits and a couple of infield errors, the Giants staged one of their characteristic late rallies today and defeated the Boston Braves, 14 to 5.

The victory gave the Giants a clean sweep of the series and a record of 12 victories in 17 home games in the last few weeks.

Trailing 5-1 going into the seventh, the Giants blasted Fred Frankhouse from the hill and scored six runs in that inning.

Ott's Homer Nets Lead.

Mel Ott put them ahead by slamming his second home run of the game, and his twelfth of the season, with two on base. In the next frame they cut loose against Ed Brandt for seven more tallies as Johnny Vergez hit a homer and a double in the same inning and George Watkins contributed a circuit swat.

Cumberland Caddies Strike for More Pay

Cumberland, Md., June 7 (Spl.).—About 15 of the older caddies of the Cumberland Country Club are on strike demanding higher pay and more privileges. It is reported the strikers want an increase from 60 to 75 cents for 18 holes and the preference system. Under the present system the boys wait their turn. Under the preference plan the boys would select the men for whom they would caddy.

Inasmuch as the schools will be dismissed for the summer in about ten days, the strike problem is not regarded as acute by members of the club as boys will soon be plentiful. About 50 caddies work at the local club.

A Society Romance
Arthur Somers ROCHE

Critics Say This Is His Best Novel

Begin It This SUNDAY in The Washington Post

SLANDER wrecked Martha Blaisdell's life . . . and the story of this woman's battle against an unjust fate is a saga of courage, moving romance and tense adventure . . .

Martha had about everything a girl could want. She was wealthy, beautiful and "straight" as they come. She thought gossip couldn't touch her . . . but she found out!

A whisper started in the "right places" . . . a knowing look passed around a dinner table . . . a drunken man's babbling . . . and Martha's life came crashing down around her. The poison tongue of slander whipped her from a life of security and love to the threshold of trial for murder!

And—what happened to the men who loved her? Well, it's a treat to read about fellows like Bert Cranston and Dr. Peter Baxter . . .

This thrilling novel is set in the color and gayety of life in "high society" . . . but it is the story of situations that might be faced by any woman and the men who love her. It is human . . . vivid . . . real . . . one of the finest novels ever written by Arthur Somers Roche, master of modern romance. Every woman will understand it and live through it as she reads.

Frisch and Umpire Fined for Fighting

Must Pay $100 Each for Decision Dispute.

New York, June 7 (U.P.).—President John Heydler of the National League today fined Frankie Frisch, manager of the St. Louis Cardinals, and Umpire Charles Rigler $100 each because of their altercation during yesterday's Cardinals-Chicago Cubs game.

President Heydler levied no suspensions.

When Frisch protested Rigler's decision calling Medwick out at the plate in the Twelfth inning, Frankie seized Rigler's arm. In the scuffle, Frisch was struck by Rigler's mask. St. Louis players rushed at the impire and a riot threatened.

Chicago won the game in the thirteenth, dropping the Cardinals out of the National League lead.

There were several ugly spills in the difficult outside course, but no serious injuries. Miss Margaret Cotter, an excellent rider from Washington, D. C., was thrown at the first jump on this course in the ladies' hunter class, but was able to ride again over the same difficult course.

Va. Alumni Seek Rixey as Pitcher

Want Pro as Protection to Own Outfielders.

Charlottesville, Va., June 7 (Spl.).—The University of Virginia alumni-varsity baseball game, inaugurated last year, will be staged here next Monday in connection with graduation exercises and the annual alumni reunion.

J. Malcolm Luck, executive secretary of the alumni association, hard pressed with reunion entertainment details, has delegated to Frank Sippley, former Cavalier football and baseball star, the job of assembling a nine from the ranks of the old grads.

Some hope was seen of getting Eppa Rixey, late of the Cincinnati Reds, or Monte Weaver, present member of the hurling staff of the Washington Nationals. There is no chance of getting Weaver, but Rixey may return for the festivities, thus bringing great joy to the camp of the graduates and removing the danger of some lesser light having to face the bombardment of the undergraduate batsmen.

This move of trying to bring in a big leaguer was made partly as an effort to remove the danger to alumni, who would still style themselves as outfielders, of being hit by fly balls. Experience gained from last year's game showed that some of the old boys were threatened with this form of disaster by not being able to move out of the way fast enough.

Mackenzie Out, Shorey Only D. C. Hope

Congressional Pro Has 86, East Potomac Star Shoots an 81.

By Post Staff Correspondent.

MERION CRICKET CLUB, Ardmore, Pa., June 7.—Roland Mackenzie, of Congressional Country Club, beat himself out of the National Open golf championship here today, and Mel Shorey, second of the District challengers, tonight remained as the Capital's hope, but a faint one.

Mackenzie, who ten years ago startled the golfing world by carrying George Von Elm to the thirty-seventh hole of the National Amateur over this hallowed turf, scored a disappointing 88 for perhaps his worst exhibition of the past decade.

Meanwhile, Shorey shot an 81, bracing after a ragged 43. He played the outgoing nine in 38 strokes with the aid of what was declared the most spectacular eagle deuce in all the 38 years of this historic tournament. Shorey's master stroke was executed on the treacherous 445-yard sixteenth. He hooked his ball into a trap 225 yards down the fairway. Reaching for his trusty spoon, the Washingtonian carried a mass of dunes and a quarry and watched his ball drop a few feet from the cup and dribble in. Shorey almost fainted. He finished 3—4, barely missing birdies on the last two holes.

Is Far Down List.

Tonight Shorey, way down the list of 149 starters, had only an outside chance of making the needed comeback to place himself among the leaders for the final 36-hole drive Saturday. He will have to shoot 72 or better tomorrow as the big shots of golfdom are crowding the spotlight.

Shorey attributed his high score to a streak of which he had on the opening hole. He followed with a 7 and played the eighth and ninth in 4 over the standard figures.

Mackenzie, 3-putting five greens and being guilty of a 4-putter on another, ran into difficulty from the very beginning and never recovered. He failed to par a single hole on the first nine, and managed to get five pars on the back nine. He was out in 46 and back in 42.

Plays With Sayers.

Tomorrow Mackenzie, who had the honor of shooting the second ball of the open today, will play at 11:40 with George Sayers, host pro. Shorey goes off at 9:55 with Emil Loeffler, of Oakmont, Pa.

Walt Mason, Himself

The Flowing Bowl.

The friends of Barleycorn, they hailed that joyous morn, when booze again was sold to men in beaker, stoup or horn. My old friend James B. Jinx remarked, "It's good, methinks, that man can go and spend his dough for cool refreshing drinks. That country is not free, has no true liberty, where man can't buy a slug of rye instead of ginger tea. That country is a frost which is so badly bossed one can't pour in a bowl of gin without a fine and cost. The old law fades away, repeal has won the day, and every gent who has a cent will be more blithe and gay. The bowl will pass around, the rafters will resound with joyous song, the merry throng at evening will be found. Our freedom is restored, our souls no longer gored, we'll sip the wine so smooth and fine from bottle, jug and gourd. And people now depressed, so worried and distressed, will find relief and dump their grief and gambol with the rest." I saw James yesterday, and he seemed far from gay, his gills were pale and he looked stale, and headed for decay. I said, "Your feet seem cold; you should be brisk and bold, for right next door there is a store where bottled goods are sold." He said, "Alas, alack! I patronized that shack for hours last night when lamps were bright, and now my works don't track."
